

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. THE AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF LAW.

STRAY. (See also the titles ANIMALS, vol. 2, p. 378; FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1035; IMPOUNDING, vol. 16, p. 4.)—"Stray," in its common-law sense, denotes a wandering beast whose owner is unknown.¹

STREAM. (See also the titles RIPARIAN RIGHTS, vol. 24, p. 978; WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.)—A stream is, first, "a course of running water, a river, rivulet, or brook; second, a steady current in a river or in the sea, especially the middle or most rapid part of a current or tide, as the Gulf Stream; third, a flow, a flowing, that which flows; fourth, anything issuing from a source, and moving or flowing continuously; fifth, a continued course or current."²

1. Stray.—Roberts v. Barnes, 27 Wis. 425. See also Walters v. Glats, 29 Iowa 437.

A stray beast is one that has left an inclosure and wanders at large without its owner and beyond his control. Sturges v. Raymond, 27 Conn. 474.

Stray and Estray.—In Woods v. Davis, 12 Kan. 577, in construing a statute providing for the taking up of strays, the court said: "He insists that only cattle whose owner is unknown can be taken up under the stray law. We are inclined to doubt this construction, and to think that the word stray is used in the statute in the sense of wandering—roving—as defined by Webster, and as ordinarily understood, and not in the sense of the old common-law term 'estrays.'"

Hogs Left in a Stockyard by some person unknown are not strays. Millcreek Tp. v. Brighton Stock Yard Co., 27 Ohio St. 435.

2. Stream.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, 173 Ill. 484, quoting Cent. Dict.

"A stream means a river, brook, or rivulet, anything in fact that is liquid and flows in a line or course." French v. Carhart, 1 N. Y. 107.

A watercourse is a stream of water usually flowing in a particular direction with well-defined channels and banks, although the channel may sometimes be dry. Simmons v. Winters, 21 Oregon 41.

Continuous Current.—Stream implies a continuous current in one direction. Murdock v. Stickney, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 117.

In M'Nab v. Robertson, (1897) A. C. 134, Lord Watson said: "The word stream, in its primary and natural sense, denotes a body of water, having, as such body, a continuous flow in one direction. * * * I see no reason to doubt that a subterraneous flow of water may in some circumstances possess the very same characteristics as a body of water running on the surface; but in my opinion water, whether falling from the sky or escaping from a spring, which does not flow onward with any continuity of parts, but becomes dissipated in the earth's strata and simply percolates through or along those strata until it issues from them at a lower level, through dislocation of the strata or otherwise, cannot with any propriety be described as a stream."

In Schlichter v. Phillipy, 67 Ind. 201, the trial court instructed the jury that "to establish the existence of a stream of water, it is not necessary to prove that it flowed continuously, * * * but it must have a substantial existence." The defendant asked an additional instruction, in substance that the stream must be well defined, flowing in a certain direction, and by a regular channel, and not the mere outburst of a freshet, flowing in no particular direction. It was held that the instruction asked should have been given.

Percolations.—Water percolating through the ground in no defined or visible channel is not a stream. Taylor v. St. Helens, 6 Ch. D. 273; M'Nab v. Robertson, (1897) A. C. 134; Miller v. Black Rock Springs Imp. Co., 99 Va. 747.

Surface Water.—For the use of stream in the sense of a general flow of surface water on a gradual slope of land, see Crewson v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 27 U. C. Q. B. 68.

Stream and Pond or Lake Distinguished.—See the title LAKES AND PONDS, vol. 18, p. 130, and see Gouverneur v. National Ice Co., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 475.

Natural Stream.—See NATURE—NATURAL, vol. 21, p. 422.

Stream and Ravine.—See RAVINE, vol. 23, p. 890.

STREET CAR. — See CAR, vol. 5, p. 145; OMNIBUS, vol. 21, p. 916; and the title STREET RAILWAYS, post.

STREET IMPROVEMENT. (See also IMPROVE — IMPROVEMENT, vol. 16, p. 57, and the title SPECIAL OR LOCAL ASSESSMENTS, vol. 25, p. 1166.) — See note 1.

STREET PURPOSES. — See note 2.

Public Highway. — “A stream is a public highway wherever it is suitable in its natural condition for general use in travel or in the transportation of property.” Griffith v. Holman, 23 Wash. 351, quoting Gould on Waters, § 107. See also the titles HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 350; NAVIGABLE WATERS, vol. 21, p. 439 et seq.

Navigable Stream. — See the title NAVIGABLE WATERS, vol. 21, p. 424.

“Stream” and “River” Synonymous. — See RIVER, vol. 24, p. 985, note.

Spring Distinguished from Stream. — See M’Nab v. Robertson, (1897) A. C. 141, and see STRING, vol. 26, p. 152.

Water. — A statute provided that a county judge might cause the erection of a bridge over any stream in the county. It was held that under this statute a bridge might be constructed over a ravine on a public road though no stream of water passed through it. The court said: “A construction should not be placed upon this statute which would deprive a county of the power of bridging such ‘sloughs’ if it is reasonably susceptible of a different construction. One of the definitions of a stream is simply ‘water.’ See Webster’s Dictionary, verbum stream. Taken in this acceptance the statute authorizes the county judge to build a bridge over ‘water’ in his county. This we believe to be its reasonable and proper construction.” Long v. Boone County, 36 Iowa 64.

In Stein v. Burden, 29 Ala. 133, it was said: “Every owner has a property in the stream that flows through his land, while he has no property in the water of which it is composed, save for the gratification of his natural or ordinary wants.”

1. Street Improvements. — In Leuly v. West Hoboken, 54 N. J. L. 508, it was said: “The phrase ‘street, sewer, and drainage improvements,’ as used in the act approved March 23, 1883 (Rev. Sup., p. 548, pl. 263), has been construed not to include the laying out and opening of streets, but only work upon streets.”

Street improvements have been held not to include sewers. See Hoboken v. Harrison, 30 N. J. L. 74. See also Clay v. Grand Rapids, 60 Mich. 456.

Bridge. — A bridge erected on one of the streets of a city across a river has been held to be a street improvement. Berlin Iron-Bridge Co. v. San Antonio, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. Rep. 408.

2. Street Purposes. — Where land is granted for “street purposes only,” it cannot be appropriated for the purpose of maintaining waterworks. See O’Neal v. Sherman, 77 Tex. 182, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 57. See also Lyon v. McDonald, 78 Tex. 77; Dubuque v. Benson, 23 Iowa 250.

I. DEFINITION. — The term "street railway" is applied to a railway laid upon the surface of the streets of cities or villages, or other highways, and used primarily for the transportation of passengers, the elevation of the track conforming to the grade of the street or highway.¹ The distinctive and essential features of a street railway as distinguished from other railroads are the location of the road upon the surface of streets and highways, its mode of operation, and its use for the carriage of passengers.² The motive power by which the

If the top of the rails generally conforms to the surface of the highway, the fact that in some few places there are cuts and fills does not prevent the road from being a street railway. Dietz v. Cincinnati, etc., Traction Co., 6 Ohio Dec. 513.

The fact that some freight and express matter is carried on an extension between two neighboring towns does not take a road out of the class of street railways. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids, 106 Iowa 476.

"The track of the steam road in a street is generally so laid as to exclude vehicles from cars are operated is immaterial as affecting its character as a street railway.¹ Thus, the power may be either animal or mechanical, such as electricity,² cable,³ or even steam.⁴ So the character of the road as a street railway is not affected by the character of the rails used for the tracks⁵ or by the fact that it is operated from a point within the limits of a city to points without the limits,⁶ even, it has been held, though the road is not throughout its whole route confined to streets and highways.⁷ Still, a railroad operated through rural country without confining its location to highways, and discharging passengers at regular stations, may not be a street railway though its motive power is electricity and only passengers are carried.⁸ In New York it has been held that a railway for passengers built exclusively underneath the surface of streets would still be a street railway,⁹ and in Pennsylvania one constructed overhead has been held to be a street railway.¹⁰

Whether Included in Term "Railroad" or "Railway." — Statutes have frequently been enacted regulating "railroads" or "railways," and the question has arisen whether such statutes apply to street railways. These terms may be used in their broad sense so as to include street railways or in their technical or popular sense so as to exclude street railways,¹¹ the sense in which the particular term is used depending on the intention of the legislature in the enactment of the statute.¹² Thus, it has been held, in view of the legislative intent, that street railways were included within the general terms "railroads" or "railways" as used in particular enactments,¹³ such as statutes prohibiting "railroad" corporations from issuing for less than par stock which shall be paid for in cash,¹⁴ or authorizing the consolidation of "railroad companies,"¹⁵ or prohibiting the obstruction of "railroad" tracks,¹⁶ or subjecting to taxation the real estate of "any railroad company,"¹⁷ or excepting "railroad corporapassing along it and from crossing except at places specially provided, and in its operation the running of the trains drives traffic from the streets and tends to destroy the use for which the street was acquired, while a street railway is so constructed and operated as not to destroy, but to facilitate, the use of the street." *State v. tions" from the right to institute proceedings in insolvency.¹ On the other hand, the courts have refused to construe such terms as including street railways in statutes making particular judgments against "any railway corporation" superior liens to prior mortgages,² giving an exclusive franchise to operate a "railroad" between certain points,³ authorizing the condemnation of land for a right of way,⁴ giving a lien on a "railroad" to laborers and materialmen,⁵ imposing a penalty for the exaction of excessive fares by "railroad" companies,⁶ making "railroad" corporations liable for injuries to employees caused by the negligence of co-employees,⁷ or liable for injuries to passengers,⁸ or limiting the time for actions against railroad corporations.⁹

II. LEGAL STATUS AND NATURE.—Since a street railway, like an ordinary commercial railroad, is of a quasi-public nature,¹⁰ the right of eminent domain may be exercised when necessary to secure for it a right of way,¹¹ though the exercise of such power is seldom necessary, as street railways are almost exclusively constructed over streets and highways; and, of course, to authorize a street-railway company to institute condemnation proceedings, the power must have been conferred by the legislature.¹² Similarly, street-railway companies owe a duty to the public to continue the operation of established street railways, and this duty may be compelled by mandamus;¹³ and contracts limiting their power to perform their duties to the public have been held to be invalid as against public policy.¹⁴ Street railways are regarded as common carriers of passengers,¹⁵ but they are not carriers of goods except under special circumstances.¹⁶ The construction and operation of street railways have been considered to be works of "internal improvement" within the meaning of a constitutional provision prohibiting the state from being interested in any work of internal improvement.¹

III. ACQUISITION OF FRANCHISE — 1. Necessity for Legislative Authorization.

— The right to construct and operate a street railway over streets and other highways belongs to that class of rights known as franchises,² and in the United States requires authorization from the legislature, directly or indirectly.³ The unauthorized construction and operation of a street railway, like other obstructions of streets and highways,⁴ constitute a nuisance, which may be prevented by injunction at the suit of the public.⁵ So quo warranto may be instituted to prevent the further usurpation of the franchise,⁶ and it seems that the nuisance may be summarily abated by the public authorities.⁷ Where a street railway is constructed without authority, the public authorities may maintain a suit to recover for the damages to the street or highway.⁸ A private individual cannot, it seems, as a general rule, question the right to operate a street railway over streets,⁹ though an abutting owner or other person who suffers special injury by the unauthorized operation of such a railway may railway is a taking for a public use and may be authorized under the power of eminent domain,¹ the right to take it can, of course, be acquired only by voluntary grant from the owner or by condemnation proceedings.² Thus the legislature cannot authorize the construction of street railways over the roads of turnpike or plank-road companies without the consent of such companies or the condemnation of the necessary right of way under the power of eminent domain.³ It has been held, however, that the use of a tollbridge as part of a public highway in the operation of a street railway was reasonable and consistent with the purpose for which the bridge was erected; that such use could be authorized by the legislature, and that it did not constitute a taking of private property in the exercise of the power of eminent domain.⁴ Still, a bridge company is entitled to tolls from a street-car company that runs its cars across the bridge.⁵ The franchise to use a street for street-railway purposes is, like other property, subject to condemnation for public use, and the legislature may therefore authorize one company to use the tracks of another company, on making compensation therefor, whenever in its judgment the public good so requires.⁶ The legislative grant of street franchises may be made, in the absence of constitutional restriction, by special acts.⁷ A grant of authority to maintain a street railway upon the public streets may be conferred by the legislature in direct words or by necessary implication,⁸ but if the grant rests upon implication it must flow necessarily out of the law from which it is derived.⁹ The grant of a street-railway franchise is not void for indefiniteness because it fails to designate the number of tracks to be laid or their exact location upon the street.¹⁰ It has been held that when parks, squares, or grounds are dedicated to the public for purposes of beauty, adornment, health, or recreation, neither the legislature nor the municipality can authorize their occupation by street railways;¹¹ but it seems to be otherwise when the property is vested in the municipality without restrictions as to its use.¹²

b. CONSTITUTIONAL RESTRICTIONS — (1) In General. — In many jurisdictions constitutional provisions restrict the power of the legislature to grant franchises for street railways;¹³ but a constitutional provision restricting the 626, 38 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 470, the charter of the street-railway company provided that no street should be occupied until the consent of the city expressed by ordinance should be obtained; and there was a statutory provision (M. & V. Code Tenn., § 1925, Annot. Code 1896, § 2399) that the powers granted were "in no manner to interfere with the rights of private citizens or private property." It was held that this did not require the consent of owners of abutting property; that the section construed was merely a saving of all rights of action for any unlawful use or obstruction of the public highways, or other wrongs or abuses.

Volume XXVII.

power of the legislature to grant street-railway franchises does not affect its power to authorize a change in the motive power of street railways.¹ A constitutional restriction on the power of the legislature to authorize the operation of a street railway on any street has been held to restrict its power to permit one railway company to operate its cars over the tracks of another company² or to permit the laying of additional tracks in a street.³

(2) Consent of Corporate Authorities. — A very common constitutional provision is one which prohibits the legislature from granting a street-railway franchise without the consent of the corporate authorities over whose streets or highways the railway is to be operated.⁴ Such a provision does not prevent a legislative grant of corporate powers to a street-railway company prior to the consent of the municipality, but merely prohibits the construction of the railway until such consent has been obtained.⁵

(3) Consent of Abutting Owners. — In New York the constitution provides that no law shall authorize the construction of street railways on any street or highway without the consent of a certain proportion of the abutting property owners,⁶ or, where the consent of such abutting owners cannot be had, the consent of three commissioners appointed by the Supreme Court, the report of such commission to be confirmed by the court.¹

(4) Special Legislation. — Constitutional provisions prohibiting special legislation may restrict the power of the legislature to grant street-railway franchises.² Thus, provisions that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation will prevent the grant by a special law of a street-railway franchise where a general law upon the subject has been enacted;³ but where no provision has been made by a general law for the acquisition of street-railway franchises, a constitutional provision prohibiting special laws for any case where provisions have been made by general law, or requiring general laws to have a uniform operation, does not prohibit the grant of street-railway franchises by a special law.⁴

(5) Entitling Act — Plurality of Subjects. — In granting street-railway franchises the legislature must, of course, observe any existing constitutional provisions prohibiting statutes from containing a plurality of subjects,⁵ and provisions relating to entitling acts.⁶

c. IMPOSING CONDITIONS. — In granting a franchise to construct a street railway the legislature may impose such conditions upon the grant as it may see fit,⁷ and provisions in the constitution prescribing conditions upon which the power to grant franchises to street-railway companies or to license the construction of street railways over their streets,¹ and may by curative act ratify the unauthorized action of a municipality in granting a street-railway franchise,² except, of course, where the power of the legislature in this respect is restricted by the constitution.³ A general constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from granting "special privileges" or "franchises" does not prohibit it from empowering municipalities to license the construction of street railways,⁴ nor is such prohibition implied in a provision that corporations shall be formed under general laws, as such authority to a municipal corporation relates merely to the grant of street franchises, and not to the creation of corporations.⁵ Territorial legislatures may enact general laws empowering municipalities to grant franchises or licenses for the construction of street railways over their streets.⁶ The power of a municipality to consent to the use of its streets for street-railway purposes may be conferred by the charter of a street-railway company as well as by the charter of the municipality.⁷ The grant, when made by a municipality or other subordinate body, under legislative sanction, is still a franchise emanating from the state.⁸

b. EXTENT OF DELEGATED POWER — (1) In General. — Municipal corporations and other subordinate or quasi-municipal bodies have no inherent power to grant street-railway franchises over their streets and highways,¹ and where such power is delegated by statute to a subordinate body, its extent, of course, depends entirely upon the terms of the statute.² Though in a few cases it has been held that the general powers vested in municipalities to control and regulate the manner in which their streets should be used empowered such municipalities to grant franchises to construct street railways over their streets,³ the great weight of authority is to the effect that the power to license the construction of street railways is an extraordinary one, and cannot be implied from a charter of a municipal corporation which confers only the usual powers ordinarily conferred upon such corporations.⁴ In Texas it is held that the constitutional provision that no law should be passed by the legislature granting the right to construct and operate a street railway within any city, etc., without the consent of the local authorities impliedly confers on municipalities the power to permit the construction of street railways on their streets.⁵ In some cases the view is taken that while a municipality cannot, under its general powers, grant an irrevocable right to operate a street railway upon its streets, it may confer a license to do so revocable at will.¹ Where the constitution requires the consent of the municipality or such consent is made by the legislature a condition to the right to construct the railway, the municipality has, as a general rule, discretion to withhold or give its consent,² or to fix the number of tracks to be laid in the street³ or the duration of the franchise or license;⁴ but the grant of a right to use a street or other highway which would result in the practical exclusion of the public therefrom has been considered to be an abuse of discretion and unauthorized.⁵ So where a municipality granted without consideration a street-railway franchise to one company when another company had offered a fair consideration therefor, its action was considered illegal as a malfeasance.⁶

(2) What Motive Power May Be Authorized. — Where a municipality is authorized generally to grant street-railway franchises it may authorize the use of any motive power it may see fit, such as electricity⁷ or steam,⁸ and may authorize the use of a newly discovered motive power or one not known at the time when the authority was given to the municipality.⁹ Of course a municipality cannot authorize a street-railway company to use a motive power expressly prohibited by the latter's charter.¹⁰

(3) Grant of Exclusive Franchise. — In view of the fact that the policy of the law is always to discourage monopolies, authority to grant exclusive privileges to any street-railway company as to the occupation of a street does not exist in a municipal corporation unless it has been conferred by the legislature in direct and express terms. It can never exist by mere implication or construction.¹¹ The legislature may, however, unless restricted by constitutional provision, expressly empower municipalities to grant exclusive street-railway franchises.¹ By some authorities the right of a city to grant exclusive privileges is regarded as depending on the length of time through which such privilege is to extend, so that if the length of time is not unreasonable the privilege may be granted.² In order that a street-railway franchise shall be deemed exclusive it must be plainly conferred by express words or necessary implication.³

By Contract with Private Parties a company may of course acquire an exclusive right over private property, and such right will be recognized even though afterwards a highway be laid out over the land occupied.⁴

c. EXECUTION OF DELEGATED POWER—(1) In General.—The legislature has power, of course, to prescribe the manner in and the conditions on which the consent of or license by the municipality shall be given. This power is not affected by a constitutional provision requiring the consent of municipalities to the grant of street-railway franchises,⁵ and municipalities, in giving their consents or granting licenses to street-railway companies, must of course comply with the requirements of the statute conferring upon them the power to do so.⁶ Thus, requirements as to the publication of notice of the applica-of street railways.¹ Where the power to license such railways or to consent to their construction is given to a municipal board or body, the consent or Consent to Single Track Does Not Authorize Double Track.—Roberts v. Easton, 19 Ohio St. 78.

Conclusiveness of Question of Consent.—Where the consent of the property owners is a prerequisite to the power of the council to grant permission to construct a street railway, the action of the council in granting the permission is not conclusive evidence against the property owners on the street of consent by the requisite majority. Roberts v. Easton, 19 Ohio St. 78. See also Beeson v. Chicago, 75 Fed. Rep. 880; Sommers v. Cincinnati, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 887, 8 Am. L. Rec. 612; *Bullock v. But it will not be presumed that the municipal authorities acted without such consent when their proceedings purport to be predicated upon it. Cincinnati College v. Nesmith, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. 24.

Consent as Regards Entirety of Route.—Consents to a proposed line have been considered as consents to its construction as an entirety only. Beeson v. Chicago, 75 Fed. Rep. 880.

In Ohio it has been held that while the common council may not evade the statute requiring the consent of adjoining owners, by substituting one route for another, it may allow the application as to a part only of the route covered by the application and petition. Simmons v. Toledo, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 64, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 124.

In New Jersey it has been held that if permission is asked to construct a street railroad upon a route partly outside of the jurisdiction of the municipality, it will be sufficient to support a grant for the part of the route within such jurisdiction that consents of the owners of the requisite proportion of frontage upon that part be obtained and filed. *Hutchinson v. Revocation of Consents.—It has been held that property owners are entitled to revoke their consents before action is taken by the municipality. Bullock v. West Chicago Rapid Transit Co., 23 Chicago Leg. N. 149; Simmons v. Toledo, 4 Ohio Cir. Dec. 69, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. 535; Hays v. Jones, 27 Ohio St. 218. But the contrary has also been held. Currie v. Atlantic City, 66 N. J. L. 140; Adee v. Nassau Electric R. Co., 65 N. Y. App. Div. 529. And to render a revocation effectual, notice of such revocation must be given before action is taken by the municipality. Hutchinson v. Belmar, 61 N. J. L. 443, affirmed 62 N. J. L. 450.

Legality of Contract in Consideration of Consent.—It has been held that an agreement between a street-railway company and a landowner made in consideration of consent to the construction of the railway is not illegal on the ground that such consent by an individual affects not only his own property, but the property of others and the interests of the public at large. *Montclair Military Academy v. number of cars;¹ prohibiting the abandonment of other lines;² or requiring indemnity from the street-railway company against liabilities arising from the construction and operation of the railway.³ Other examples of conditions that may be lawfully affixed are that the railway company shall observe and be subject to present and future ordinances regulating the operation of the railway;⁴ that the company shall keep in repair the streets upon which its tracks are constructed;⁵ that it shall water the streets;⁶ that it shall pay for the use of the streets a yearly sum⁷ or a proportion of the earnings of the railway;⁸ or that it shall pay the expense of passing the ordinance conferring the license and a reasonable attorney's fee.⁹

Conditions Which Are in Conflict with General Laws, such as that the company to which the license or grant is made will not exercise one of its corporate powers,¹⁰ cannot, of course, be imposed;¹¹ and an attempt to impose unauthorized conditions is void and does not affect the validity of the municipality's license or consent.¹²

Waiving Conditions. — A municipality may, of course, waive the performance of conditions imposed by it in giving its consent to the construction of street railways.¹³

4. Who May Acquire Franchise — a. IN GENERAL. — Though, as a matter of fact, street railways are almost universally operated by private or quasi-public corporations, the franchise to own and operate such a railway may belong to an individual,¹⁴ and in the absence of constitutional restriction the legislature may authorize municipalities to construct and operate street railways over their streets.¹⁵ In Michigan, however, it has been held that the constitutional provision prohibiting the state from being interested in any work of internal improvement prohibited the legislature from authorizing a city, which is to be considered as an agency of the state, to construct and operate a street railway.¹ Where the franchise is claimed by a corporation under municipal grant or license, it must, of course, have power to operate the street railway,² but a corporation empowered to operate a street railway may take a street franchise extending beyond the term of its own franchise to exist as a corporation, the street franchise being assignable;³ and similarly, such a corporation may accept a street franchise running for a shorter period than its corporate existence.⁴

b. 5. Acceptance of Franchise.—While the grant of a street-railway franchise must be accepted by the grantee before it can become binding,¹⁰ such acceptance may be implied from the circumstances,¹¹ such as the previous application

IV. CROSSING OTHER RAILROADS — 1. In General. — A franchise for the operation of a street railway on a public street does not confer any right of exclusive occupancy of the street nor clothe the owner thereof with power to prevent the crossing of its tracks by another company having a franchise to operate a railway on an intersecting street;² and the same is true with regard to the right of a street railway to cross the tracks of an ordinary railroad,³ or of an ordinary railroad to cross the tracks of a street railway.⁴ In the case of a crossing of an ordinary railroad by an electric railway operated by the trolley system, the trolley wire may be suspended over the tracks of the railroad company provided that sufficient space is left for the passage of trains without danger to the employees.⁵ Where a street railway has rightfully constructed a crossing over another railroad, it has the right, when repairs thereto become necessary, to replace it with a crossing of a safer and better pattern.⁶ A railway company whose tracks are to be crossed cannot prevent such crossing on the ground that the company attempting to construct the crossing is usurping a street-railway franchise.⁷

2. Compensation. — A railroad or street-railway company whose tracks on a public street are crossed by another street-railway company is not entitled to compensation for the resulting injuries arising out of the impairment of its easement in the street⁸ nor for the interruption of its business rendered necessary in the construction of the crossing,¹ though it has been held that the owner of the tracks crossed would be entitled to damages for any injury to its tracks.²

3. Expense of Making and Maintaining Crossing.—It seems that a street-railway company which crosses the pre-existing tracks of another street railway or ordinary railroad is bound to construct the crossing at its own expense and to maintain the crossing in a proper condition of repair; but it is not required to pay any portion of the expense of maintaining at such crossing gates which the railroad company is required under an exercise of the police power to maintain for the protection of the public.³

4. Statutory Regulations.—In some jurisdictions the statutes regulate the construction of the tracks of ordinary railroads and of street railways across each other,⁴ and have intrusted to commissioners⁵ or to courts⁶ the power to regulate the manner of constructing such crossings. Where general power to regulate the construction of crossings by street railways over the tracks of ordinary railroads is given to commissioners or courts, they may, in a proper exercise of their discretion, deny to a street-railway company the right to construct a grade crossing and compel it to construct an overhead crossing.⁷ So some statutes direct that the tribunals to which is intrusted the duty of determining the manner of crossing shall avoid grade crossings whenever practicable.⁸

V. JOINT USE OF TRACKS. — The tracks of a street-railway company lawfully laid in a public street do not become a part of the street so as to authorize other railway companies as a matter of right to operate cars over them,¹ nor has a municipality any implied power to authorize one street-railway company to use the tracks of another company.² Two street-railway companies may, by agreement, authorize the one to use the tracks of the other;³ but where street-railway tracks are owned by cotenants, one cannot, without the consent of the other, confer on a third the right to use such tracks.⁴

Compulsory Acquisition of Right. — A street-railway company has no inherent or implied right to acquire by condemnation proceedings under the power of eminent domain the right to use the tracks of another company;⁵ but such right may be expressly conferred by the legislature.⁶ So the legislature, under its reserved power to alter, amend, or repeal the charter of street-railway companies, may authorize one company to acquire the right to use the tracks of another company⁷ and may delegate to municipalities the right to authorize one company to use the tracks of another.¹ Likewise, a municipality, in granting to one company its consent to the use of streets for street-railway purposes, may impose conditions giving to other street-railway companies the right to use the tracks of the prior grantee,² or may reserve the right subsequently to allow such use.³ The right acquired by one company to use the tracks of another company does not invest the former with any ownership of or title to the tracks which it is authorized to use;⁴ and a court of equity has the power to provide protection to each against the invasion of its rights by the other.⁵

Compensation must be made to the company whose tracks are used or condemned.⁶ If the franchise of the company the right to use whose tracks is taken is not exclusive, compensation need be made only for the use and wear of the tracks,⁷ and need not include loss of profits from competition.⁸ The statutes conferring on one company the right to use the tracks of another frequently provide the manner in which the amount of compensation for such use shall be determined.⁹ to be made on account of the motive power used for the operation of the railway.¹ Thus, the rule has been held to apply not only where the railway was to be operated by animal power,² but also where it was to be operated by cable power, necessitating considerable substructure in the street,³ or by electric power,⁴ under either the underground system⁵ or the trolley system, the latter necessitating the erection of poles in the street and the stringing of overhead wires,⁶ and even where steam was the motive power, dummy engines being used.⁷ In the case of ordinary steam railroads the rule is different. They constitute an additional burden on the land, and may not be constructed or operated in the street unless compensation has been made to the owners of abutting property.⁸ The distinction between the rule governing ordinary railroads and that applied to street railways is to be found not in the motive power employed, but in the character of the use. A street railway is directly ancillary to the uses of the street; it is a mode of travel closely allied to those in common use on the highway, and, as a matter of fact and common knowledge, is very much less of an obstruction than an ordinary railroad.⁹

New York Rule. — In New York, though the general rule is recognized where the fee in the street is in the municipality or state,¹ where the fee is in the abutting owner it is held that compensation must be made to him to authorize the use of the street for railway purposes;² but a municipality which owns the fee in its streets is not entitled to demand compensation for the use of such streets for street-railway purposes under legislative authority.³

Qualifications. — Where an abutting property owner can show that by the construction of the street railway he will suffer some special and material damage from the impairment of his easement of access, he is entitled to compensation,⁴ and if a street-railway company abuses its rights and so operates its road that it becomes a nuisance, the abutting landowners have an appropriate remedy by injunction or by an action for damages.⁵ So a street-railway company operating its road by mechanical power is liable for damages to property owners adjoining its power houses who may be injured by the manner in which the power houses are run.⁶

Statutory Provisions. — In some jurisdictions statutory provisions have been enacted requiring compensation to be made to abutting owners.⁷

recognized that an abutting property owner, especially where he owns the fee in the street or highway, may, where an action for damages would be inadequate as a remedy, enjoin the unauthorized construction and operation of a street railway.¹ If, however, the abutting owner receives no special injury from the construction and operation of the street railway, he has no standing to demand an injunction;² and it has been held that he cannot as a matter of right institute as relator a quo warranto proceeding to prevent the use of a street for street-railway purposes.³ Where the abutting owner was the owner of the fee in the street, he has been permitted to maintain ejectment to oust one unlawfully constructing a street railway in such street.⁴ An abutting property owner may sue to compel the proper location of the tracks of a street railway.⁵

3. Right to Stand Vehicles on Curb Line for Loading and Unloading.—The owner of property abutting on the street has the right to have vehicles stand in front of his property for such reasonable time as is necessary for loading and unloading them, even though in the exercise of such right the passage of street cars is impeded.⁶

VII. NATURE AND EXTENT OF FRANCHISE—1. In General.—The right to operate a street railway over streets and public highways is a franchise, the owner of which acquires thereby no estate or interest in the soil.⁷ While a street-railway company has no exclusive right to the use of its tracks and the ground covered by it, but is only entitled to use them in common with others traveling on the highway,⁸ it has from the necessity of the case a paramount

This question chiefly arises when the liability of the street-railway company for injuries from negligence is in question. The fact that a street railway often occupies a large right to have its tracks unobstructed for the passage of its cars.¹ The cars have the right of way upon their tracks as against both those whom they meet and those who go in the same direction,² and wagons moving at a slow rate of speed, and occupying the tracks or a portion thereof in front of a car, are required, when they can do so, to withdraw from the tracks to allow the passage of the car.³ So the owner of a street-railway franchise has such an interest in its tracks that another person has no right, from the fact that the tracks are laid in the street, to run cars or other vehicles particularly adapted for the purpose over them.⁴

Making Repairs. — The right to operate a street railway impliedly confers the right to use upon the street the ordinary and necessary appliances for the repair of the railway system.⁵

Route as Entirety. — A franchise for a street railway over a particular route confers merely the right to construct the railway over such route as an entirety.⁶

Distribution of Electricity. — A franchise to operate a street railway by the trolley electric system does not empower the railway company to use it for the distribution of electrical power or light to private consumers.⁷

2. Construction of Grant. — The grant of a street-railway franchise is considered as an encroachment upon the public or common rights in the streets or highways, and it is well established that such a grant is to be construed most strongly against the grantee.⁸ Where the grant is unambiguous, it is not to be construed according to the conduct of the parties and the rule of practical construction.⁹

portion of crowded streets, and that it is constructed and operated on the theory that it is not an additional burden upon the highway, but is merely an additional use contemplated when the street was laid out, necessitates a liberal construction in favor of the rights of the public, and the law is averse to conceding any exclusive right to that portion of the street to the railway company except where the necessities of the case demand. See infra, this section, Construction of Grant; infra, this title, Liability for Injuries from Negligence.

In the case of a legislative grant of a franchise to a private corporation, nothing is to be taken by implication against the public except what necessarily flows from the nature and terms of the grant; and the application of this doctrine will prevent a street-railway company, chartered by a special act, from occupying with its railway a street the use of which was granted to another company by the municipality under a general statute twenty-eight years later, where the grant to the latter company is definite as to location and that to the former company is very indefinite. *Junction Pass. 3. Motive Power. — As heretofore stated, the nature of the motive power used does not affect the character of the railway as a street railway.¹ An exception in the grant of the franchise of the use of a particular power is equivalent to a positive prohibition of such use;² but the question what motive power the owner of a street-railway franchise is entitled to use depends upon the construction of the grant of the franchise.³ A grant in general terms, without expressly designating the power to be used, will authorize the use of any power ordinarily in use for street railways,⁴ and under general terms descriptive of the motive power a subsequently discovered power may be authorized;⁵ but where the grant expressly designates the motive power, no other power may be used.⁶ The adoption of one form of motive power does not necessarily preclude a subsequent change,⁷ and in many jurisdictions

Change to Cable Power Held to Be Unauthorized. — In People v. Newton, 112 N. Y. 396, the grant of a street-railway franchise before the underground cable system as motive power was in use, conferring on the grantee the right to place a track on the surface of the road and to make temporary openings for its necessary foundation, was held not to authorize the grantee subsequently to convert its road into an underground cable system, necessitating the opening of the streets and the construction of the legislature has conferred upon municipalities¹ or upon some special tribunal such as railroad commissioners,² abutting property owners,³ or commissioners appointed by a court where the property owners refuse to consent to a change in motive power,⁴ the power to authorize a change. A general authority conferred on a municipality to permit the use of any power does not authorize it to permit the owner of a street-railway franchise to use a power expressly prohibited in the grant of the franchise.⁵ In an action to recover for injuries received through the operation of a street railway, a private individual cannot raise the question of the right of the railway company to operate its cars by other than the power specified in its charter;⁶ and it has also been held that an abutting property owner could not raise such question.⁷

4. What Streets May Be Occupied. — The determination of the question what streets may be occupied depends upon the terms of the grant of the street-railway franchise.⁸ Where the grant expressly designated the streets through and over which the road might be laid, and contained a further general provision that the road might be laid "over and across" any street or highway within its termini, it was held that such latter provision was intended merely

for the crossing of the latter streets, and not to allow the laying of the road lengthwise along such streets.¹ Where the grant authorizes the construction of the road to the river at the foot of a street through which the road runs, and subsequently the space between the river and the foot of the street as existing at the time of the grant is filled in, the road may be laid to the river.² Where the grant authorizes several routes collectively, the construction of the road over one route does not preclude the grantee from subsequently occupying another of the authorized routes.³ Where the grant designates the termini of the route and authorizes the construction of the railway on any street between such termini, the railway should be allowed to follow such streets as are the principal channels of travel and on which it will best promote the public convenience;⁴ and if merely the termini of the route are fixed, and the road is constructed along a particular route, the grantee is concluded by such location.⁵

"At." — Where the terminus of the route was designated "at" a certain village, the construction of the road to a convenient point "within" the village was held to be authorized.⁶

"From." — So the term "from" as used in a grant of the right to construct a street railway from a city to a village has been construed to authorize the construction of the road from a point within the city.⁷

"Between." — A franchise to construct a street railway on certain streets "between" two designated streets does not authorize the construction of the road along either of the latter streets.⁸

Bridges. — A franchise authorizing the construction of the road along a particular street or highway has been held to authorize its construction across a bridge forming a part of such street or highway.⁹

Private Property. — When the charter designates specified streets as the route of the road, such route cannot be abandoned and the road constructed through private property,¹⁰ though to avoid dangerous crossings slight divergence from the designated streets and highways has been held to be permissible.¹¹

5. What Tracks May Be Laid. — The question what tracks may be laid depends, of course, upon the terms of the grant.¹² General authority to construct a street railway without limitation as to the number of tracks has been held to authorize the construction of a double-track railway;¹³ and the fact that the railway is originally constructed as a single-track railway does not deprive the grantee from subsequently constructing an additional track,¹ especially where the authority is to construct a single-track railway with the privilege of transforming the single into a double track.² Where the authority was to build a road with the necessary turnouts and switches, provided the road was located to the south of the centre of the highway, it was held that only a single-track railway was authorized.³ General power to construct a street railway impliedly includes the right to construct in connection therewith the necessary turnouts and switches,⁴ and it has been held that the necessary switches for moving the cars to and from the car barns could be laid on a street intersecting that over which the franchise was granted.⁵ If the grant of the franchise expressly designates what turnouts and switches may be laid, then, of course, only the turnouts and switches so designated are authorized;⁶ and authority to construct necessary turnouts and switches, expressly given in the grant of a franchise for a single-track street railway, has been held to be a continuing authority to construct such additional turnouts and switches as the increase in travel rendered necessary, even though the grant of the franchise contained a limitation as to the time for the construction of the railway.⁷ Under authority to construct necessary turnouts, sidings, etc., an extension of the road cannot be constructed.⁸ So under the guise of constructing switches, the double tracking of the railway will not be permitted.⁹

Location of Tracks. — The grant of the franchise generally provides with regard to the location of the tracks in the street or highway,¹⁰ and it has been said that if the location of tracks is not designated the owner of the franchise may place them wherever in the street it is for his best interest to go.¹¹ Though a statute requiring the tracks to be placed "as nearly as possible" in the centre of the street does not require under all circumstances that the tracks be placed in the centre of the street, they should be so placed when it is practicable to do so.¹²

Gauge of Track. — It seems to be within the discretion of the owner of the franchise to determine the gauge of the tracks where there is no specification thereof in the grant of the franchise.¹

6. Right to Transport Freight. — It has been suggested that where the franchise is merely to operate a street railway the grantee has no right to operate cars thereon for freight transportation, as the object of a street railway is the transportation of passengers;² but of course the grantee may be expressly authorized by the legislature to carry property as well as passengers,³ and when it is so authorized, it may operate cars intended exclusively for the transportation of property.⁴

7. Power of Eminent Domain. — While the condemnation of property for a street railway is a public use and may be authorized by statute,⁵ of course the existence of the power of street-railway companies to institute proceedings for such condemnation is dependent upon the terms of the statute under which the proceedings are authorized.⁶

8. Exclusiveness of Franchise. — A street-railway franchise will not be deemed exclusive so as to preclude the operation of other railways unless an exclusive franchise is plainly conferred by express words or necessary implication.⁷ Therefore, the legislature may grant a second franchise to operate a street railway upon the same street without infringing upon the rights of the first grantee or giving to it a right of action arising from competition and the consequent reduction in earnings,⁸ though it has been held that where the new track intervenes between the curb and the track of the prior grantee, the latter is entitled to recover damages resulting from interference with freedom of access to its cars and the loss of earnings therefrom,¹ and if the second grantee is authorized to use the tracks of the former grantee, compensation must be made for such use.² The legislature may, of course, grant franchises giving an exclusive right to operate street railways upon certain streets and highways,³ and in some instances statutes have been enacted restricting the acquisition of franchises to construct street railways paralleling and competing with existing lines.⁴ An exclusive franchise is to be strictly construed,⁵ and though it has been held that exclusive permission to operate a street railway within a city would exclude the operation of another street railway by a later-discovered motive power,⁶ yet there is authority to the effect that an exclusive grant to operate a horse railway in a city does not exclude the subsequent grant of a franchise to operate therein street railways by some other or newly discovered motive power.⁷ So a provision in the charter of a commercial steam railroad that no other railroad should be constructed between certain points in a city was held not to preclude the construction of a street railway between such points.⁸ An exclusive franchise to operate a street railway is regarded as property which may be taken, so far as its exclusiveness is concerned, under the power of eminent domain, so as to authorize the grant of a franchise to operate another railway.⁹ It has been announced as a general rule that where there are conflicting grants of street-railway franchises, the first to undertake in good faith the construction of its road has the better right.¹⁰

9. Protection of Franchise as Contract Obligation. — The legislative grant of a street-railway franchise is in the nature of a contract obligation, the impairment of which is prohibited by the provision of the Federal Constitution denying to the states the power to enact laws impairing the obligation of contracts.¹ But the power to alter or revoke may be reserved.²

VIII. IMPROVEMENT, PAVING, AND REPAIR OF STREETS — 1. In General. — It is a well-recognized general rule that the grant of a street-railway franchise imposes upon the grantee the duty to construct and maintain its roadbed, with reference to the surface of the street, in such condition that its tracks shall not render the street unsafe for ordinary travel;³ but in the absence of any duty imposed by its charter or by general laws or ordinances, it is under no obligation to keep in repair, pave, or improve generally the streets over which it operates its cars, or to maintain the part between its tracks in the same condition as the remainder of the street is kept by the municipality;¹ nor, where its tracks are laid in a street already paved, is it liable for any portion of the cost of such paving.² In many instances, however, the duty is expressly imposed upon street-railway companies in the grant of their franchises to pave, repave, or improve the whole or a portion of the streets over which their tracks are laid,³ or to keep in repair the whole or a certain portion of the street.⁴ Where the charter of a street-railway company or the grant of its franchise expressly fixes its liability with regard to the paving or repaving of streets, the municipality cannot by ordinance impose on the company an additional burden in this respect, as such additional imposition would be an impairment of the contract rights of the company;⁵ nor can municipalities impose on such companies additional burdens to pave between or about their tracks.¹ In the grant of the franchise the legislature may reserve the power to impose additional burdens as to the paving and improvement of the streets,² but a provision in the charter of a street-railway company that the grantee shall be subject to city ordinances regulating the running of passenger railway cars does not enable the city to impose on it the duty to pave any portion of the street,³ and the same has been held true of a provision that the company should be subject to such regulations as might be made by the municipality "in regard to paving, repaving," etc.⁴ The right to levy special assessments against railways for the improvement of the streets over which their tracks are laid is fully discussed in another title.⁵

2. Extent of Obligation or Duty. — The extent of the obligation or duty of a street-railway company to pave, repair, and otherwise improve the streets depends upon the provisions of its charter or franchise, and in construing such provisions the usual rules of interpretation are, of course, applied.⁶

"Good Order" and "Repair." — It has been held that an obligation to keep the entire street in "good order" and "good repair" requires the removal of dirt and filth necessarily accumulating thereon.⁷

Paving and Repaving. — The duty is frequently expressly imposed upon street-railway companies to pave or repave the streets or portions thereof,⁸ and under the duty to keep a certain portion of the street "well paved" the company may be required to construct a pavement where one did not exist;⁹ but an obligation to "pave" has been held not to include excavating with reference to grading preliminary to paving.¹⁰

"Repair" as Including Paving. — The duty imposed upon a street-railway company by its charter or the grant of its franchise to keep in "repair" the street or a particular portion thereof does not impose upon it any duty to pave a

Under an ordinance requiring a street-railway company to "keep the surface of the streets inside the rails, and for two feet four inches outside thereof, in good order and repair," "provided, however, that upon the paved portion of said streets the materials for repaving shall be supplied at the expense of the city," where the city directed the company to "raise and repair" that portion of the pavement which was within the rails, it was held that the city was bound to bear the expense of the materials, as such repairs amounted to repaving within the meaning of the proviso. street which at the time was unpaved,¹ though it seems to be the better rule that the duty to keep a portion of the street in good repair will require the company, where such portion has been paved, to replace such paving with an improved pavement to correspond with a change made in the paving of the balance of the street by the municipality,² and a fortiori such duty will require the company to restore any pavement which may be put down by the municipality.³

"Condition" as Applied to Paving. — The duty to keep a certain portion of the street in "as good condition" as the municipality keeps the balance of the street requires the company in the first instance to pave such portion of the street, where the balance is paved by the municipality.⁴

"Reconstruct" as Applied to Paving. — The duty to "reconstruct" streets upon which tracks are laid does not impose upon the street-railway company the duty, after constructing the street, to repave it in case the character of the paving is subsequently changed by the city.⁵

Character of and Necessity for Paving. — Where the street-railway company is under obligation to pave and repave the street when necessary, the municipality is to be the judge of the necessity for paving and repaving⁶ and also of the character of paving to be laid.⁷ An obligation to repave extends to a repaving with a different or improved paving,⁸ and the fact that only a particular character of paving was in use at the time of the grant of a franchise which imposed upon the street-railway company the duty to pave and repave the street does not limit its liability to paving and repaving with that character of paving, but it may be required to pave with an improved kind.¹

Streets and Portions Thereof to Be Paved, Etc. — The question what streets and portions thereof the company is required to pave, etc., depends upon the construction of the statutes or ordinances imposing the duty.² Where the duty is to repair, pave, or otherwise improve the street, the company is bound to keep in repair, pave, etc., the whole street from curb to curb.³ Where the provision was to "keep the surface of the streets inside the rails and for two feet four inches outside thereof" in repair, it was held that the company was required to keep in repair two feet four inches outside of each outer rail.⁴

The Duty to Repair or Pave "In and About the Rails" has been held to include the portion of the surface of the street disturbed in the construction of the track,⁵ and in applying this rule, to include the space between double tracks⁶ and one foot outside of each outer rail.⁷

The Term "Roadbed," as used in a requirement that a street railway shall pave its roadbed, includes the foundation on which its tracks rest.⁸

Change of Street Grade. — Where the grant of a street-railway franchise requires that the tracks shall conform to the grade of the street, the company is required, at its own expense, to relay its tracks to conform with a change of the grade.⁹

3. Release and Discharge of Liability. — Where the duty to repair, pave, repave, or otherwise improve streets is imposed upon a street-railway company by ordinances of a municipality granting its consent to the use of the streets for street-railway purposes, the municipality may, by agreement with

Under a contract by a city with a company, giving a right of way, that the company shall keep in good order and condition, from curb to curb, the streets, intersections, bridges, etc., though which its tracks pass, it cannot be claimed that the company is under obligation to keep in such condition streets on which its tracks do not pass, and which extend alongside and border on middle or neutral grounds, dividing them, comprised between curbs or external lines, and which do not form part of thoroughfares on which vehicles usually move. the company, modify or change the liabilities of the latter in this respect.¹ If, however, a mandatory duty in this regard is imposed by statute, a municipality has no power to release the company from the performance of the duty.² Sometimes it is left optional with the municipality whether to require the street-railway company to pave or improve the streets.³

4. Enforcement of Liability — Improvement at Expense of Street-railway Company. — Where a street-railway company refuses to perform its obligation to repair, pave, repave, or improve the street, the municipality may make the necessary repairs, etc., and recover the cost from the company,⁴ provided such cost is reasonable;⁵ and the sum expended has been held to be prima facie that recoverable, where no fraud is shown and no facts appear to impeach the reasonableness of the account.⁶

but this writ should not issue when it appears that the company, by reason of its financial straits, has no power to comply therewith.¹

Injunction. — Where a street-railway company refuses to perform its duty in regard to the repair, paving, or improvement of the street, an injunction restraining the operation of the railway until such duty is performed may issue.²

Indictment. — It has been held that an indictment will lie against a street-railway company which fails to perform its duty with regard to the repair of streets.³

IX. SALES, LEASES, AND CONSOLIDATION — 1. General Principles. — It has been announced as a general rule that as the operation of a street railway is a matter of public interest, a street-railway company cannot make a valid transfer, by way of either absolute conveyance, mortgage, or lease, of its street-railway franchise or of its railway or property necessary for the performance of its public duties.⁴ In other cases, however, the grant of a street-railway franchise, entitling the grantee to enter upon and occupy streets with the railway structure, is considered to be a typical easement in property, and as such to be a contract right capable in the absence of express restrictions of being sold, conveyed, assigned, or mortgaged.⁵

2. Sales. — It seems that in the absence of statutory authority one street-railway company has no power to purchase the franchise of another company,⁶ and in at least one jurisdiction street-railway companies are expressly prohibited by statute from selling their roads.⁷ In some cases, however, a street-railway franchise has been regarded as property which may be transferred in the absence of statutory restrictions like other property.⁸ Of course the legislature may confer this power⁹ or may ratify previous unauthorized transfers.¹⁰ And power to purchase street-railway franchises may be con-

Mortgages. — It has been held that in the absence of express statutory authority a street-railway company has no authority to mortgage its railway and franchise,² though in other cases the grant of a street-railway franchise was held to be property which could be mortgaged and which would pass to a purchaser under a foreclosure of the mortgage.³ The power to mortgage the street railway and franchise may be, of course, and generally is, conferred by the legislature.⁴

such as conditions requiring the payment of a license fee for each car operated,¹ a stated car service for the accommodation of the public,² or the lighting of streets,³ or provisions limiting the duration of the franchise.⁴ Personal obligations on the part of the street-railway company conveying its railway and franchise are not necessarily binding upon its grantee, though the latter may in its purchase assume such obligations so as to render them enforceable against it.⁵ The purchaser of a street railway and franchise acquires all the rights of its grantor, such as a right to extend the railway.⁶

3. Leases. — Authority to make or take leases is frequently conferred upon street-railway companies, either by charter or by general laws; and leases entered into without express authority have received legislative ratification.⁷ Power given to one street railway to lease the road of another company impliedly confers on the latter power to make the lease.⁸

Rights and Liabilities of Lessee. — The lessee of a street railway and franchise is under the same obligations with regard to the operation of the railway as were imposed upon its lessor in the grant of the franchise.⁹ On the other hand, the lessee acquires all the rights of the lessor.¹⁰

Liability of Lessor. — In Massachusetts it has been held that where the grantee of a street-railway franchise leases its railway under statutory authority, the lessor still remains, in the absence of statutory exemption, liable for injuries arising to third persons through the operation of the railway by the lessee.¹¹ In Pennsylvania, however, it has been held that the lessor is not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of the lessee in the operation of the railway, since the statutory authority to lease must be construed as a grant with all the ordinary attributes of such authority between lessor and lessee, unless the statute makes a reservation of continuing liability in the lessor.¹² The grantee of a street-railway franchise cannot, by a lease of its railway, escape liabilities imposed upon it in the grant of the franchise.¹³

X. REGULATION AND CONTROL — 1. In General. — It is a well-recognized rule that municipalities, under their general police power or inherent control over the manner in which the public streets shall be used, may regulate the operation of street railways within their limits,¹ whether the franchise is owned by an individual or by a corporation.² And a municipality cannot by contract abrogate or restrict this right.³ The right to regulate the operation of street railways is subject to the limitation that the regulation must not be so unreasonable as to destroy the property or franchise of the street-railway company,⁴ and if a grant of special powers and privileges accompanies the grant of the street-railway franchise, coupled with limitations upon the right of municipal interference, the municipality cannot, by any regulation of its own, abridge the privilege thus conferred or infringe upon the limitations thus prescribed.⁵

2. Precautions in Operation of Cars — a. IN GENERAL. — Municipalities have the right, in the exercise of their police power, to impose, for the protection of the public, reasonable regulations with regard to the operation of street cars,⁶ such as regulations requiring the stoppage of cars upon the appearance of danger to persons on the street,¹ before crossing the tracks of steam railroads² and before crossing intersecting streets,³ the ringing of bells at street crossings,⁴ and the carrying of lights at night;⁵ regulations prescribing the side of intersecting streets upon which the cars shall stop to take on and let off passengers;⁶ and regulations prescribing the minimum distance within which cars going in the same direction may approach each other.⁷

the following cases involving particularly the consolidation of street railways.

b. FENDERS ON CARS.—A municipal ordinance requiring fenders on street cars for the protection of the ordinary traveler on the street has been held to be a valid and proper police regulation.⁸

c. SCREENS OR VESTIBULES ON CARS.—Statutes requiring street-railway companies to construct screens upon the front of their cars to protect the motorman, gripman, or engineer from the inclemency of the weather during the winter months, have been sustained as valid police regulations.⁹

d. NUMBER OF OPERATORS ON CARS.—Municipal ordinances requiring two employees or operators on each car have been sustained as valid police regulations,¹⁰ but in the absence of such a requirement, a street railway is not necessarily required to have both a conductor and a driver on its cars,¹¹ and in some cases the power of municipalities to require both a conductor and a driver on horse cars has been denied.¹²

e. RATE OF SPEED.—Regulations prohibiting the running of street cars faster than a certain speed have universally been sustained as valid under the police power,¹³ and a fortiori a street-railway company is bound by provisions in the grant or consent of the municipality to the use of its streets limiting the rate of speed of the cars,¹ though in some few instances ordinances limiting the speed of street-railway cars have been held to be invalid as being unreasonable.² In the absence of limitations on speed a street-railway company has a right to drive its horse cars at the rate of speed used for other vehicles drawn by horses for the carriage of passengers;³ but street cars cannot be operated at a speed incompatible with the use of the street or highway by others with reasonable safety.⁴

f. MOTIVE POWER. — It has been held that under its general police power a municipality may prohibit the use of a particular motive power in the operation of a street railway where the safety of the public requires such prohibition,⁵ even though the grant of the street-railway franchise may have impliedly authorized the use of such power.⁶

3. Use of Salt or Sand on Tracks. — Municipal regulations restricting the use by street-railway companies of salt or sand on their tracks have been sustained as valid police regulations.⁷

4. Removal of Snow and Ice from Tracks. — Ordinances regulating the removal of snow and ice from the tracks have also been sustained as valid police regulations.⁸ In removing snow from the tracks the street-railway company is required to do the work in a manner which will not interfere unnecessarily with the use of the street,⁹ and while in the absence of restrictions it may have a right to place the snow removed upon other portions of the street in a reasonable manner, it has no right to place it so as to interfere with the flow of water in the street.¹⁰

5. Repair of Streets. — Municipal ordinances requiring street-railway companies whose cars are operated by horse power to keep in repair that part of the street between their tracks have been sustained as valid police regulations.¹¹ In Colorado, where the grant of the franchise for a cable street railway required the railway company to construct siphons at street intersections to carry the surface water beneath the tracks, a subsequent ordinance requiring the company to keep street siphons free from sediment was held to be invalid as placing an additional and unauthorized burden on the company.¹

6. Watering Tracks.—An ordinance requiring street-railway companies to water their tracks so as to lay the dust may be sustained as a valid police regulation.² By reason of peculiar provisions, however, certain ordinances requiring the sprinkling of streets have been held to be unreasonable and invalid.³

7. Interference with Railway in Making Street Improvements.—Street-railway companies, like all others using the streets and highways, must submit to temporary inconveniences for the sake of permanent public advantage, and municipalities may, therefore, in making street improvements, temporarily obstruct or remove the tracks of such companies though a serious interruption in the operation of the railway may follow;⁴ but in making such improvements unnecessary interference with existing street-car lines is not authorized.⁵

8. Plan of Construction.—Regulations of the plan and manner of construction of street railways have been sustained under the general police power.⁶ Thus, it is competent to prescribe that only a single track shall be laid through narrow portions of a street,⁷ that guard wires shall be provided in the construction of an electric trolley system, where several electric wires cross each other,⁸ or that a particular character of rails shall be used.⁹ Similarly, after a street railway has been constructed, requirements as to a change in the plan of construction have been sustained as valid police regulations,¹⁰ such as changes in the location of tracks¹¹ or in the construction of the track, to enable

9. Accommodation of Public — Number of Cars. — A municipal regulation requiring the running of cars at minimum intervals for the accommodation of the public, if reasonable, is a valid exercise of the police control.⁴ In the passage of such an ordinance the city council is presumed to act in the exercise of a judgment upon the facts, and this judgment must control in the absence of a showing that it has been improperly and unreasonably exercised.⁵

Overcrowding Cars. — In Missouri a municipal ordinance limiting the number of passengers to be carried on a car has been sustained as a valid police regulation.⁶

the right to impose license fees is not reserved do not preclude the subsequent imposition of license fees,¹ and a provision in the grant of a franchise that a certain fee shall be paid for each car operated does not prevent the municipality from thereafter requiring the payment of an increased license fee.² Where a municipality has authority to consent or withhold its consent to the use of its streets for street-railway purposes, it may impose as a condition to the giving of its consent the payment of a fee for each car operated³ or an annual fee for each mile of track operated.⁴

Amount of License Fee. — While it is recognized that a municipality cannot, under its police power to license and regulate the operation of street railways, impose a license fee for the purpose of revenue,⁵ under a general power to "license and regulate" the operation of street railways the courts have, in view of the intention of the legislature as shown in other legislation, included power to raise revenue for general municipal purposes by the imposition of license fees.⁶ The courts are adverse to the denial of the validity of an imposition of a license under the police power on the ground that the purpose of the imposition is for revenue,⁷ and license fees of five dollars,⁸ twenty-five dollars,⁹ and as high as fifty dollars per annum for each car operated have been sustained as valid under the police power.¹⁰ When the amount of the license fees depends upon the construction, the same rule of construction which applies to ordinances imposing license fees in general is to be applied.¹¹

XL TERMINATION OF STREET FRANCHISE — 1. Revocation. — As heretofore shown, the grant of a street-railway franchise is a contract obligation within the protection of the Federal Constitution prohibiting the several states from enacting laws impairing the obligation of contracts.¹ The legislature may, of course, in granting street-railway franchises, reserve a power of revocation,² or such power may be reserved by a municipality in granting its consent, under legislative authority, to the use of its streets for street-railway purposes.³ The intention of the legislature to exercise a power of revocation reserved by it must clearly appear in order to establish such revocation.⁴

2. Expiration by Lapse of Time. — The duration of a street-railway franchise depends, of course, on the language of the grant,⁵ and such franchise, like any other, terminates, of course, upon the expiration of the time for which it was granted;⁶ nor will the breach by the municipality of a contract to purchase the railway, rolling stock, etc., at the expiration of the period for which the franchise is granted operate to prolong its existence.⁷ Where circumstances render the further operation of the street railway impossible, the franchise terminates through the inherent limitation of the grant itself.⁸ A street-railway corporation may take a grant of a franchise for a longer period than its corporate life, the franchise being assignable, and when assigned the franchise does not terminate with the corporate life of the grantee.⁹

3. Surrender. — While a franchise to construct a street railway may be lost by surrender,¹⁰ the intent to surrender such right should be plain and unequivocal.¹¹

Abandonment. — The surrender of the right to construct a street railway under a franchise grant may be presumed from the failure by the grantee for many years to construct the railway,¹² and surrender by abandonment of grants of this character may be the more readily presumed, the grant being of a public easement, and for the purpose of providing for and promoting the public good.¹³ Still, an abandonment of a street-railway franchise is not to be presumed from slight and equivocal circumstances.¹⁴

4. Taking under Power of Eminent Domain. — The franchise to operate a street railway is a species of property which may be taken under the power of eminent domain.¹⁵

5. Nonuser. — A street-railway franchise, being of a public nature, may be forfeited for nonuser,¹ and a municipality has no power by contract to prevent such forfeiture.² Where a street-railway company has the right to lay a single or a double track at its option, it does not, by constructing and operating its road as a single-track road for many years, forfeit its right to construct a double track when the public convenience demands it.³

Quo Warranto proceedings will lie to enforce the forfeiture of a street-railway franchise for nonuser.⁴

6. Forfeiture for Breach of Conditions Prescribed in Grant of Franchise —
a. IN GENERAL. — A violation of the conditions upon which a street-railway franchise was granted is cause for a forfeiture of the franchise.⁵

Conditions Limiting Time of Construction. — One of the most frequent causes for forfeiture of street-railway franchises is breach of conditions limiting the time for the construction of the railway.⁶

No Excuse for a Breach of the conditions is afforded by the mere fact that performance would put the company to great inconvenience and cause a large outlay of money,⁷ or that by reason of insolvency it is unable to perform.⁸

b. WAIVER OF FORFEITURE. — The state may waive performance of the conditions imposed by it in the grant of street-railway franchises, and thereby

Evidence that the street-railway company ran only one car a day over its tracks, doing this not for the accommodation of the public, but merely as a pretense for holding the franchise, shows a sufficient nonuser to warrant a judgment of forfeiture. People v. Sutter St. R. Co., 117 Cal. 604.

avoid the forfeiture of the franchise for breach of such conditions.¹ So municipalities may waive conditions imposed in giving their consent to the use of streets for street-railway purposes,² but they cannot waive performance of conditions imposed by the state.³

c. NECESSITY FOR JUDICIAL DETERMINATION OF FORFEITURE. — In some special instances provisions for forfeiture of street-railway franchises for breach of conditions in the grant have been considered to be self-executing, so that upon breach of the conditions the existence of the franchise ipso facto ceased without a judicial or legislative declaration of forfeiture;⁴ but unless the grant clearly so provides, the breach of its conditions does not ipso facto terminate its existence; there must be a judicial or at least a legislative determination to that effect.⁵ Where the franchise under which a street railway operates provides that the municipality may declare a forfeiture upon a breach of certain stipulations, the municipality may declare the forfeiture at its option upon a conceded breach of the stipulations, without resort to the courts.⁶

d. WHO MAY ENFORCE FORFEITURE. — As a general rule a private individual cannot, in a collateral proceeding, assert a forfeiture of a street-railway franchise for breach of the conditions contained in the grant.⁷ The state may institute proceedings to enforce the forfeiture,¹ and where the franchise is granted by a municipality under legislative authority, it may sue to enforce a forfeiture thereof for breach of the conditions imposed by it,² but it seems that a municipality cannot assert a forfeiture for breach of conditions imposed by the legislature in granting the franchise.³

c. EQUITABLE RELIEF FROM FORFEITURE.—In New Jersey a court of equity, under the general equitable power to relieve from forfeitures, has asserted the right to relieve a street-railway company from the effect of a forfeiture of its street franchise incurred through a failure to complete the railway within the time stipulated by a municipality in giving its consent to the use of its streets.⁴

7. Effect of Termination of Franchise.—Upon the termination of the franchise to operate a street railway, the right to maintain the tracks in the street also terminates, as such right is merely accessory to the right to operate the railway, and cannot subsist when the principal right is gone.⁵ Upon the termination of the franchise, the company has, as a general rule, the right to remove the structure of its railway.⁶ Sometimes, however, grants of street-railway franchises by municipalities expressly provide that upon the termination of the franchise the railway shall revert to the municipality.⁷

or as against pedestrians.¹ As a matter of necessity, however, from the fact that street cars can travel only upon the tracks, they have in a qualified sense a paramount right of way in that vehicles traversing the street upon which the tracks are laid must give way to cars which they meet or by which they are overtaken;² and the same is true as regards pedestrians.³ For the purpose of crossing a street upon which a street railway is operated, other vehicles have an equal right with the street cars to the use of the street,⁴ especially where streets intersect;⁵ and a driver of a vehicle approaching the line of a street-railway company has the right of way if, proceeding at a rate of speed which under the circumstances is reasonable, he can reach the point of crossing in time to go safely on the tracks in advance of an approaching car, the latter being sufficiently distant to be checked and if need be stopped before it reaches him.⁶ At street crossings pedestrians have also equal rights with the street cars in the use of the streets for crossing.¹ Where street railways intersect at street crossings, irrespective of motive power neither has a superior right of way, but it is the duty of the one last arriving at the intersection to give way to the other.² In Michigan, by statute, where street cars on intersecting lines arrive at the intersection at substantially the same time, precedence is given to the car on the track first laid.³ Where the track of the street railway is laid in part over private land over which it has secured the right of way, it has, of course, a right to the exclusive use of such part of its tracks.⁴

(2) General Degree of Care Required. — It is the duty of persons operating street cars to use reasonable or ordinary care, or the care which an ordinarily or reasonably prudent man would use, to avoid injury to other persons using the street.⁵ The standard of ordinary care is not, however, absolute, but varies according to the circumstances and according to the possible or probable danger which may arise.⁶ Thus, greater care is required in the operation of heavy cars traveling at high rates of speed than would be required in the operation of lighter cars traveling at slower rates of speed and more quickly stopped.⁷ So a higher degree of care is required in the operation of cars in the more thronged streets of a city than in the less frequented streets, or in the open or suburban parts;¹ greater care is required at street crossings where pedestrians and vehicles may be expected than at other points;² and greater care is to be used to avoid injuries to children in the street than the law demands for the protection of adults.³ Where a street railway is constructed partly in a street and partly over a private road, the only care required toward persons on the private road is that required toward licensees.⁴

Instructions have frequently been held to be erroneous as imposing too great a burden on the company;⁵ for example, an instruction importing that the street-railway company was required to use extraordinary precautions⁶ or such a degree of care as would prevent accident.⁷

A Rule of the Street-railway Company for the direction of its servants in the operation of cars which imposes upon them a higher degree of care than is imposed by law cannot be considered as determining the degree of care required.⁸

(3) Employment of Servants. — A street-railway company is required to employ competent servants to operate its cars, and is liable for injuries caused through the incompetency of such servants;⁹ but where, at the time of an accident, no negligence on the part of the servants in charge of the car is shown, the company cannot be held liable on mere proof of facts affecting the general character of such servants for skill or proficiency in the discharge of their duties.¹⁰ A street-railway company is also required to provide enough men on its cars to control them properly;¹ but it has been held that a company operating cars by horse power was not, as a matter of law, required to keep a conductor on each of its cars in addition to a driver,² and in the absence of evidence that a conductor was necessary for the safe running of an electric car it has been held to be error to admit evidence that there was no conductor on the car at the time of the accident.³

Flagmen at Crossings. — The rule requiring ordinary railroad companies to station flagmen at much-traveled street crossings⁴ does not apply to street railways.⁵

(4) Character and Condition of Cars. — A street-railway company is under a duty to use reasonable care to see that its cars are in proper condition, so that they may be operated without undue damage to the public,⁶ and to equip its cars with such safety appliances as men of average prudence would use under the circumstances.⁷ But it is not required to equip its cars with the best appliances to avoid accidents which human skill has devised; it is only required to use appliances which are in general use and which have been found to be usually adequate and safe, and to avail itself of new inventions and improvements known to it.⁸ And it is not required to adopt a device the practical utility of which has not been demonstrated.⁹ The failure to furnish a car with proper equipment does not render the company liable for injuries which result from other causes than such failure.¹⁰

(5) Speed and Control of Cars. — It is negligence on the part of a street-railway company to operate its cars at so great a speed that they cannot be controlled to avoid injury to pedestrians and vehicles rightfully on the track.¹¹

What Constitutes an Improper Rate of Speed depends upon the circumstances.¹ The company has the right to run the car at any rate of speed not dangerous to the public,² and is not required to regulate the speed at such a rate as may be necessary to avoid injury to persons crossing the tracks in an unreasonable and improper manner,³ the test of negligence in the rate of speed being the speed at which an ordinarily prudent man would have run the car under the particular circumstances.⁴

Where the Statutes or Valid Municipal Ordinances Impose Speed Restrictions, their violation has been considered to constitute negligence per se,⁵ while in other cases it has been held that exceeding such speed, while evidence of negligence, was not conclusive.⁶ If the grant of the street-railway franchise expressly restricts the maximum speed, the running of a car in excess of such speed is evidence of negligence.¹

Proximate Cause. — It has frequently been held that the mere fact that the car was operated at a prohibited or excessive rate of speed will not render the company liable if it is not also shown that this was the cause of the injury and that such injury could have been avoided if the speed had been within the permitted rate.²

Control of Car. — While a car is in motion, the driver, motorman, or gripman must remain in place so as to control it if necessary,³ and where the danger of a collision becomes apparent, he must use a reasonable diligence to slacken the speed or stop the car if necessary to avoid the collision.⁴

Proof of Speed. — The general rules of evidence apply with regard to the proof of the rate of speed at which a car was operated.⁵ Witnesses may express their opinion as to the rate of speed;⁶ and the fact that the car ran an unusual distance after a collision, or before it could be stopped, is evidence to show that the speed was excessive.⁷

(6) Lookout. — Drivers, gripmen, and motormen are required to keep a reasonably careful lookout ahead to discover pedestrians and vehicles on or approaching the tracks, so as to be able to take the proper precautions to avoid injuries;⁸ and the fact that such servants were prevented from keeping this lookout by reason of other duties in the operation of the car, imposed upon them by the company and demanding their attention,¹ such as the collection of fares,² does not relieve the company from liability for injuries which might have been avoided had a proper lookout been kept. It has been held that the duty with regard to keeping a lookout is limited to a lookout ahead, and negligence cannot be attributed to a failure to observe vehicles or pedestrians approaching the track from the side or rear;³ and the failure to keep a lookout ahead at a place where the track is laid over the private right of way of the street-railway company, and where persons are not to be expected to be on the track, is not negligence.⁴ Where a proper lookout was in fact kept at the time of the accident, the fact that the railway company required its servants to perform other duties which might have prevented them from keeping a proper lookout is not evidence of negligence.⁵

operating a street car upon or approaching the tracks, warning of the approach of the car should be given by sounding the gong or bell, or otherwise, and the failure to give such warning may constitute such negligence as to render the street-railway company liable for injuries resulting therefrom.¹ So if a street car is rapidly approaching a point, as for example a street crossing,² where it is apparent that the danger of injury to the public will be materially lessened by giving warning of the car's approach, it is the duty of those operating the car to give such warning.³ And it has been held that where the operator of a car cannot see the track far enough ahead to give due warning of the car's approach to persons on the tracks, he should continually sound the gong in anticipation of their being on the tracks.⁴

Municipal Ordinances frequently require that on approaching any street crossing the bell or gong shall be sounded at a certain distance from the crossing.⁵

Proximate Cause.—Negligence cannot be predicated on a failure to sound the gong or bell, so as to render the street railway liable, where the person injured by the car had, in fact, knowledge of its approach.⁶

(8) Violation of Ordinances.—It has been held that a municipality cannot, in the exercise of its police power, impose on street-railway companies duties in the operation of their cars the violation of which will create a civil liability to persons injured from a neglect thereof,⁷ and that the violation of ordinances regulating the operation of street railways should be considered as evidence of negligence,¹ but in other jurisdictions it has been held to constitute negligence per se.²

(9) Contributory Negligence — (a) In General. — Contributory negligence on the part of the person injured through the operation of a street railway will, of course, as in other cases, preclude a recovery;³ and it will have this effect even though there was a violation by the company of an ordinance regulating the operation of the cars.⁴ Since street cars are more easily controlled than the trains of an ordinary railroad, and do not travel at the high rate of speed of those trains, the danger from injuries in the operation of street cars is materially less than in the case of railroad trains, and persons are not required to exercise the same degree of watchfulness and attention to keep themselves out of the way of the former as out of the way of the latter.⁵ Still, the courts have, in view of the apparent danger to persons using streets upon which street cars are operated, established certain requirements which they are bound to observe to avoid injury.⁶ The doctrine of imputable contributory negligence, whereby it is sought to impute to children the contributory negligence of their parents or custodians, or to passengers the contributory negligence of their carrier, has received thorough treatment in another title.⁷ Where a pedestrian is injured by a collision between a street car and a vehicle, the vehicle being pushed by the force of the collision against the pedestrian, negligence on the part of the driver of the vehicle does not affect the liability of the street-car company if it was also negligent.¹ The question whether a person has been guilty of contributory negligence is generally a question for the jury.²

(b) Injuries Avoidable Notwithstanding Contributory Negligence. — Although one injured by a collision with a street car may have been guilty of negligence, still, if the operator in charge of the car, after discovery of such person's negligence, could by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the injuries, such person's negligence will not relieve the street-railway company from liability.³

(10) Proof of Negligence — Burden of Proof. — As in other cases of injuries from negligence,⁴ the plaintiff in an action against a street-railway company for injuries received in a collision with a street car has the burden of proving negligence on the part of the defendant.⁵

Admissibility of Evidence. — The general rules of evidence as to admissibility are applicable to actions against street-railway companies for injuries from negligence.¹

Question for Jury. — The general rule that the question of negligence is a question of fact for the determination of the jury² applies with regard to the existence of negligence on the part of street-railway companies in the operation of their cars;³ but where there is no proof of negligence, or where the evidence is such that the court would be required to set aside a verdict finding negligence on the part of the company, the court is justified in taking the case from the jury.⁴

b. COLLISION WITH VEHICLES AND HORSES — (1) In General. — The rights of persons using vehicles and horses on the streets and of street-railway companies operating cars on the same streets are mutual and co-ordinate, and such companies are required to use ordinary care to avoid collision with the vehicles and horses.⁵ On the other hand, if there has been no negligence on a collision.¹ In case of a collision between a street car and a vehicle, there is no presumption that it was caused by the negligence of either the driver of the vehicle² or the person operating the car,³ but the question of negligence is a matter of proof.

(2) Vehicles Moving Along Track. — While it is the duty of vehicles moving along street-railway tracks to leave the tracks on the approach of cars, so as not to obstruct their passage,⁴ still, those in charge of cars must use reasonable diligence to prevent collisions, and the company is liable for injuries resulting from their failure to do so.⁵ Thus, where a vehicle is seen moving on the tracks ahead of a car the motorman, gripman, or driver should bring his car under control if possible, so as to avoid a collision if the driver of the vehicle fails to leave the track;⁶ but he is not required to bring the car to a stop unless the vehicle is sufficiently near to be reasonably considered in a position of danger.¹ It has been held that where a street car approaching from the rear runs down a wagon driving along the track, this is of itself sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the street-railway company in the absence of special circumstances excusing such act to carry the question to the jury.² Where a street car is approaching from the rear a vehicle moving along the track, the person operating the car has not the right to proceed without regard to the presence of the vehicle, in anticipation that the vehicle will leave the track in time to give free passage to the car.³ But it has been held that where a vehicle is moving along street-railway tracks in the direction of an approaching car, the person operating the car has a right to assume, until the contrary is evidenced from the actions of the driver,⁴ that he will turn from the tracks in time to give free passage to the car. The person operating a street car has no right to run down a vehicle the person in charge of which refuses to leave the track so as to allow the car to pass,⁵ even though a municipal ordinance makes such refusal to turn out a misdemeanor.⁶ If the street-railway company is not guilty of negligence in the operation of the car it cannot be held liable for injuries resulting from a collision between the car and a vehicle moving along the track.⁷

Running Street Car on Wrong Track. — Where a street car was proceeding on the left-hand instead of the right-hand track, and came in collision with the plaintiff's team, which was prevented by a heap of snow from avoiding the collision, a refusal to charge the jury that the car had a right to travel on the left-hand track was held to be error for which the judgment should be reversed, as the mere fact that the car was running on the left-hand track was not itself a fault on the part of the defendant which would subject it to damages. *Altreuter v. In Cook v. Metropolitan R. Co., 98 Mass. 361, it appeared that the horses attached to a car, after pulling it part way up a ferry drop, refused or were unable to pull it further, whereupon the driver applied the brake, but was unable to hold the car stationary, and it ran back, injuring the horses of C., who was driving a wagon, following the car at a distance of about ten feet behind it, another team following him. The defendants usually had an extra horse to pull the car up the drop, but on this occasion there was none. It was held that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company sufficient to go to the jury.

(3) Vehicles Moving Beside Track. — Where a vehicle is moving on a street beside a street-railway track, at a safe distance from the track, the person in charge of a street car is justified in operating the car on the presumption that the vehicle will be kept at a safe distance from the track, and the street-railway company cannot be held liable for a collision caused by a sudden veering of the vehicle;⁸ but if the driver of such a vehicle is not aware of the car's approach, warnings and signals of its approach should be given,⁹ and if the vehicle is in such close proximity to the track that the danger of a collision is imminent, reasonable care in having the car under control is required of the person in charge of the car.¹⁰

(4) Vehicles Standing on Street. — If a vehicle is standing on the side of a street at a safe distance from the track, the motorman of an approaching car has a right to presume that the vehicle will remain where it is, and if the horses become frightened at the car and back the vehicle into the car, the company is not liable.¹¹ But where a vehicle is standing on the track, or in such close proximity thereto as to prevent the free passage of the car, the company will be held liable for a collision if the person in charge of the car, operating it in a prudent manner, could have avoided the collision;¹ and the improper obstruction of a street-railway track by allowing a vehicle to stand thereon, or in too close proximity thereto, will not prevent a recovery for injuries caused by a collision if the accident could have been avoided by the exercise of due care on the part of the person operating the car.²

An Error of Judgment on the part of the person operating a street car as to the existence of sufficient space between the tracks and a vehicle standing upon the street to allow the car to pass is not necessarily negligence.³

(5) Contributory Negligence — (a) In General. — Persons driving vehicles on streets upon which street cars are operated must of course use reasonable care, or the care which a reasonably prudent man would exercise, to avoid collisions with cars,⁴ and persons riding in vehicles as passengers must themselves use due care to avoid being injured by a collision.⁵ When the street car has come to a full stop after collision with a vehicle attributable in the first instance to the negligence of the driver of the latter, an injury which is due to the car starting before the driver of the vehicle has extricated himself from the consequences of the collision cannot be attributed to the driver's original negligence.⁶ The question as to the existence of contributory negligence is generally one for the jury.⁷

(b) Driving on Street on Which Street Cars Are Operated. — A driver of a vehicle is not guilty of contributory negligence in selecting for his route a street on which street cars are operated when he might have taken another route,⁸ nor is it negligence to drive on such a street a wagon so constructed that the driver cannot see to the rear over the bed of the vehicle;¹ and in driving along a street it is not necessarily negligent to approach so near to the track as to render a collision with a street car possible.²

(c) Standing Vehicles On or Near Track. — In case of collisions between street cars and vehicles standing in the street on or near the track, the question has frequently arisen whether the driver was guilty of contributory negligence.³ To leave a horse and vehicle in the street unhitched and unattended has been held to constitute contributory negligence.⁴ So it has been held to be negligence to stop a wagon on the track of a street-railway company, in front of an approaching car, though the driver thought that the wagon was clear of the track.⁵ But it is not necessarily negligence to stand a vehicle next to the curb line for business purposes.⁶

it has been held, though the wagon is so constructed or loaded that a watch to the rear cannot be kept.¹ So it is not necessarily contributory negligence to drive a vehicle along a track immediately in the rear of a car.² Nor is it necessarily negligent to drive a vehicle along a track in the direction from which cars will approach,³ but when so driving the driver should keep a lookout for cars approaching in the opposite direction, so as to be able to turn out of their way,⁴ and he should use reasonable diligence to ascertain the approach of cars from the rear, so as to be able to turn out in time to avoid obstructing the passage of such cars;⁵ but he is not, as a matter of law, required to keep a constant watch to the rear to discover approaching cars,⁶ and in turning from the track he is not, as a matter of law, required to look behind for approaching cars.⁷ Where a driver of a vehicle has actual knowledge of the approach of a car from the rear, he should use reasonable diligence to leave the track so as not to obstruct the free passage of the car.⁸

(c) Crossing Track — aa. IN GENERAL. — It is not negligence for a person to drive across street-railway tracks whenever he may have occasion to do so;⁹ but in crossing such tracks the driver of a vehicle must exercise reasonable or ordinary care,¹⁰ though it has been held that he is not required to take the same precautions as a pedestrian.¹¹ The question of negligence in such a case depends upon the proximity or remoteness of the car, its speed, and other circumstances;¹² and the driver is not bound to take notice of the fact that an

that the failure of the driver of a vehicle to look for approaching cars before crossing street-railway tracks was not, as a matter of law, contributory negligence.¹ The failure of a person to look for approaching cars before crossing street-railway tracks does not place him in any worse position than if he had looked and seen the car; and therefore if, at the time when he started to drive across the tracks, the car was at such a distance that an attempt to cross after seeing it would not have been contributory negligence, his failure to look for the car will not preclude his recovery.²

Time to Look.—The driver of a vehicle should look for approaching cars at the time of crossing and when in close proximity to the track; his duty is not performed by looking when a considerable distance from the track, or a considerable time before he attempts to cross.³

c. INJURIES TO PEDESTRIANS—(1) In General.—The operation of street cars is necessarily attended with considerable danger to pedestrians, and while the owners of street railways are held to due care in the management of their

been applied where a person alighting from a car on one track crossed an adjoining track without looking,¹ or alighted from a car upon the parallel track,² or where a pedestrian, after waiting for the passage of a car on one track, crossed behind such car and across another track without looking, and was struck by a car on the latter track,³ or where a person walking behind a wagon moving along one track crossed the other track without looking for an approaching car,⁴ or where a person standing between parallel tracks stepped backward upon one track without looking.⁵ Where it would not have been contributory negligence to attempt to cross in front of an approaching car if the pedestrian had looked and seen it, his failure to look will not constitute contributory negligence.⁶

Ignorance of the Existence of Tracks may prevent the failure of a pedestrian to look for approaching cars from constituting contributory negligence,⁷ but cannot have such effect if he was negligent in not discovering the existence of the tracks.⁸

Time to Look. — A pedestrian about to cross street-railway tracks should look for cars when in close proximity to the track.⁹ The fact that he looked and saw no car when a considerable distance from the track, for example, before leaving the sidewalk,¹⁰ does not relieve him from the duty of again looking when near the track.¹¹

Obstructions to Vision. — If obstacles temporarily intervene to prevent observation, the pedestrian should delay crossing the track until proper observation can be made,¹ and where there is a permanent obstruction to his vision in his approach to the track, he should look after passing such obstruction.²

Extent of Observation. — A pedestrian crossing street-railway tracks is required to extend his observation for approaching cars only to the distance within which cars proceeding at the customary and reasonably safe speed would threaten his safety, and is not required to extend his observation to every approaching car, however far distant.³

(b) Walking on Track. — A person walking on or near the track of a street-railway company and using reasonable care and prudence to avoid injuries is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence;⁴ but one walking on or near street-railway tracks must use reasonable care to discover the approach of cars,⁵ and is guilty of contributory negligence if he is injured through his failure to leave the track when he sees a car approaching.⁶ In Pennsylvania the mere fact that a pedestrian was walking on the track of a street railway has been held to show contributory negligence,⁷ and the same rule seems to apply in Louisiana.⁸

(c) Standing On or Near Track. — While the mere fact that a person when injured was standing on or in close proximity to the track of a street railway does not render him necessarily guilty of contributory negligence,⁹ still, when he is in such a position he must use reasonable care to discover the approach of cars and avoid injury from them.¹⁰ This question as to contributory negligence has frequently arisen where men working in streets on or adjacent to street-railway tracks have been injured by passing cars.¹¹

In Shea v. Potrero, etc., R. Co., 44 Cal. 414, it was said that it was not necessarily contributory negligence for a person "to walk on the track instead of the space by the side of the track. d. INJURIES TO CHILDREN—(1) Children On or Near Track.—Street-railway companies are required to exercise due care to avoid injury to children on or near their tracks, and will be liable for injuries resulting from their failure to do so.¹ Thus, the company is liable for injuries where a child goes upon the tracks of a street railway a sufficient distance in advance of an approaching car to enable those in charge thereof, by the exercise of ordinary care, to stop the car before striking him,² or where the person in charge of the car fails to keep a proper lookout ahead³ or runs the car at an excessive rate of

(2) Children on Cars.—The question of the liability of a street-railway company for injuries to children riding on its cars but not in the relation of passengers has frequently arisen. It is a fundamental principle that a street-railway company is not liable for injuries to children upon its cars unless it has been guilty of a breach of duty;² and such a company is under no obligation to guard its cars while in operation to prevent children from boarding them and jumping from them.³ So cars left temporarily standing in the street are not regarded as dangerous machines, attractive to children, within the intent of the turntable doctrine,⁴ and the company is under no obligation to prevent children from playing on them.¹ Persons in charge of street cars may be guilty of negligence rendering the company liable where they permit children to get on and off the cars while in motion, without any effort to restrain them from such acts.² So where children are riding on a street car, the persons in charge of the car must use reasonable diligence to avoid injury to them though they are trespassers, and for injuries resulting from their failure to do so the company will be liable;³ and where a child of tender years is in a dangerous position upon a street car, though without permission, the failure of those in charge of the car to remove the child from such position may constitute negligence rendering the company liable.⁴ These principles have been rigidly applied where the person in charge of a car compelled a child to get off while the car was in motion,⁵ and where, by motions indicating an intention to administer corporal punishment, he frightened the child so that it jumped or fell from the car.⁶ On the other hand, the company is not liable where a child stealing a ride on a street car is injured without any fault on the part of those in charge thereof,⁷ as where he rides voluntarily, and unnecessarily jumps from the car while in motion.⁸

The driver stood on the front platform and could not see the position of the child. It was held that a nonsuit was properly allowed.

(3) Contributory Negligence — (a) of Child. — The general rules as to contributory negligence of children, which have been fully stated in another title,⁹ are applicable in case of injuries by street cars. Thus, contributory negligence of children sui juris will prevent recovery for injuries,¹⁰ but children of tender years have been held to be as a matter of law incapable of contributory negligence,¹¹ and the same degree of care on their part is not

Particular Applications of Doctrine. — A child of immature years is not necessarily negligent in crossing the tracks of a street railway without looking for approaching cars,² or in passing in front of a moving car of which it is aware,³ or in walking on a street-railway track,⁴ or in standing on or near tracks,⁵ or in playing in the street.⁶

dren of tender years, the negligence of the parents or custodians of the child in permitting the exposure to the danger is to be imputed to the child,¹ and of course the general rules recognized in the several jurisdictions apply fully to injuries received by a child from the negligent operation of a street railway.² Parents are themselves chargeable with the exercise of ordinary care in the protection of their minor children, and the want of such care will prevent a recovery by the parent for injury to or the death of his child.³ The question whether the parents or custodians were negligent in failing to keep a more careful watch over the child is generally for the jury.⁴

c. INJURIES TO BICYCLISTS. — In recent years a number of cases have arisen involving the liability of street-railway companies for injuries resulting from collisions with bicyclists. The general subject of the right of bicyclists to use streets and highways has been discussed elsewhere in this work.⁵ A street-railway company is required to exercise due care to avoid injury to persons riding bicycles on the street,⁶ but of course the company is not responsible for injuries resulting from a collision caused by the inability of the rider to manage his bicycle.⁷ It is not negligence for a bicyclist to ride upon a street on which street cars are operated,⁸ nor is it necessarily negligence for him to ride along the tracks of a street railway;⁹ but a person riding a bicycle in a public street occupied by a street railway is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety,¹⁰ and when riding on the tracks should give reasonable attention to the approach of cars from the rear so as to enable him to leave the track in time,¹ though he is not, it seems, required to look behind him.² It is negligence to attempt to cross street-railway tracks in front of a rapidly approaching car which cannot be stopped in time to avoid a collision,³ or to attempt to cross without first looking for approaching cars.⁴

f. INJURIES TO DOGS. — The decisions on the question whether an action may be maintained for the negligent killing of a dog are conflicting, but in the United States the weight of authority is that such an action lies,⁵ and in a number of cases recovery has been allowed against street-railway companies for dogs killed through the negligent operation of the cars. Thus, where a dog is seen on the track in front of a street car, the person in charge of the car is not authorized to run it without regard to the safety of the dog, and trust solely to the alertness of the dog to avoid injury.⁶

g. COLLISION BETWEEN STREET-RAILWAY CARS. — Where the tracks of two street railways intersect, the law presumes, in the absence of proof that either railway company has by usage or otherwise any right of precedence at the crossing, that they stand on a footing of equality, each lawfully using a public street and each owing to the other the duty of exercising reasonable care while so doing,⁷ and that the one which arrives at the crossing first is entitled to pass over before the other can enter upon it.⁸ Hence, where a person on the car of one company is injured through a collision at a crossing, caused by the negligence of those in charge of a car of another company,

But where a dog was run over by an electric car, and no one saw him until he was under the car, the mere fact that the car was running faster than usual does not show that the running down of the dog was a negligent act. Dettmers v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 22 N. Y. App. Div. 488.

Where a car on one track reaches a crossing from one to two hundred feet in advance of a car on the other track, the two cars cannot be considered as approaching the crossing at the same time, within the meaning of a statute giving to the older company precedence in crossing. Becker v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 121 Mich. 580.

the latter is liable,¹ and one railway company may recover from another for injuries to its car caused by the negligence of the other.² It has been held that where at the crossing of tracks of two street railways the rights of each are equal, the fact that the rear end of a car on one track is struck by the front end of a car on the other track is sufficient to show negligence in the operation of the latter car. The rule of res ipsa loquitur applies in such case.³

Where One Car Is Following Another on the Same Track, those in charge of the rear car should maintain such a distance and speed as to enable the car to be stopped in time to avoid a collision when the front car is stopped to discharge or take on passengers; and where the two cars belong to different companies, and the rear car is negligently operated, resulting in a collision, the company guilty of such negligence is liable for injuries caused thereby to persons on the front car.⁴

k. COLLISION BETWEEN STREET CARS AND RAILROAD TRAINS. — Where a street-car line crosses an ordinary railroad, the relative duties of the street-railway company and the railroad company to avoid collisions at the crossing are the same as in the case of ordinary travelers over the crossing.⁵

l. FRIGHTENING HORSES. — The right of a company to construct and operate a railway along the streets carries with it the right to do whatever is necessary for the successful operation of such railway; so that the company is not, as a general rule, liable for injuries caused by horses which become frightened by its cars or by the usual and necessary noise incident to their operation.⁶

such as the sounding of the gong¹ or the escape of steam from a dummy steam engine standing still.² If, however, horses on the street have shown indications of fright, and an accident is imminent, and this has been seen by the operators of the street car, they are bound to use reasonable care to avoid the accident,³ and it may be their duty to stop the car if in motion,⁴ or to delay starting the car if it has stopped,⁵ or to desist from sounding the gong,⁶ and a failure to do so may constitute negligence rendering the street-railway company liable for injuries resulting from such failure. Still, the question what steps should be taken in the exercise of reasonable care to avoid the accident is for the jury, and it cannot be said as a matter of law that a failure to stop the car constitutes negligence.⁷

The Use of a Car Which in Running Produces Great, Unusual, and Unnecessary Noises, calculated to frighten horses, may constitute such negligence as to render the company liable for resulting injuries.⁸

In Hazel v. People's Pass. R. Co., 132 Pa. St. 96, it appeared that the car had run off the track and was being put back in the usual manner, and with the usual noises, and that a horse standing on the street twenty or thirty feet from the car became frightened, reared up and fell, and was killed. It was held that, in the absence of other evidence of negligence, a recovery could not be allowed.

In Ayars v. Camden, etc., R. Co., 63 N. J. L. 416, it appeared that an electric car, moving at the ordinary rate of speed, ran without lessening its speed through a pool of water on the tracks, thereby throwing the water and causing a roaring and hissing noise, by reason of which a horse driven by the plaintiff became frightened and ran away, injuring the plaintiff. It was held that there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury on the question whether the railway company had exercised reasonable care.

In Richmond R., etc., Co. v. Hudgins, 100 Va. 409, it was held that there was no error in an instruction that "if the jury believe from the evidence that the horse of plaintiff was frightened by the noise and smoke arising from the machinery of the car of defendant, and that said noise and smoke was not incident to the ordinary operation of their cars, they are instructed that this raises the presumption that such noise and smoke would not have been caused if those who had the providing, maintaining, and care of defendant's machinery had used proper care in regard thereto, and, in the absence of an explanation on the part of the defendant showing due care on its part, they may infer that the defendant was guilty of negligence; and if they further believe that such negligence caused the accident as set forth in the declaration, and that the plaintiff was free from fault, they must find for the plaintiff."

Contributory Negligence. — It has been held that one who deliberately drives onto a street upon which an electric railway is operated, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the horse he is driving will take fright at the cars, is guilty of contributory negligence, precluding a recovery for injuries received in consequence thereof.¹ So a city hackman has been held to be guilty of contributory negligence in allowing his horses to stand on the street without having hold of the reins.²

2. Injuries from Defects in Tracks or Obstructions in Street. — In constructing its railway a street-railway company is required to use reasonable care to avoid injury to persons using the street, whether on foot or in vehicles,³ and to abutting property owners;⁴ and after the railway is constructed, the company is required to maintain it in a safe condition so as to avoid injury to such persons,⁵ and must not leave dangerous obstructions in the street.⁶ Where the grant of the franchise imposes on the company duties with regard to the maintenance and repair of the street in addition to its common-law obligations, persons using the street who are injured by reason of the company's neglect or omission to perform such duties may recover from the company therefor.¹ The company is not, however, required at its peril to construct and maintain the railway in such condition that no injury can possibly happen to persons using the street; it is only required to use reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of its line.²

Particular Defects. — Street-railway companies have frequently been held liable for injuries caused by their failure to keep their tracks on a level with the surface of the street, so as to avoid creating an obstruction to the general use of the street,³ and where such a company is required so to keep its tracks, the fact that elevation of the rails above the street is caused by the wearing down of the street by traffic does not relieve the company of the duty to remedy such defect.⁴ The company may also be held liable for injuries arising from excavations or holes allowed to remain between the tracks,⁵ or, in case of a street railway operated by the cable system, for injuries caused by the excessive and improper width of the grip slot.⁶

Removal of Snow from Tracks. — In the removal of snow from the tracks, the company is required to use reasonable care not to render the street unsafe for the general public, and on failure to perform such duty is liable for consequent injuries to persons using the street.¹ So if the snow is deposited negligently on the street in such a manner as to obstruct the natural flow of water from the street, the company will be liable for injuries caused thereby.² The liability of the company for such injuries is dependent on its negligence in the removal of the snow.³

An Abutting Property Owner may enjoin a street-railway company from throwing snow from its tracks and leaving it on the street for an unreasonable time, so as to cut off the use of the street for access to his property.⁴

Defective Electric Wires. — In a number of instances actions have been brought against street-railway companies to recover for injuries caused by the breaking or sagging of electric trolley wires, and recoveries have been allowed where the company was negligent in maintaining such wires in an unsafe condition.⁵ So there may be a recovery for injuries received from the escape of electricity through the defective bonding of the rails,⁶ or from electricity escaping through the slot of an underground trolley street railway.⁷ But in the absence of negligence on the part of the company, it cannot be held liable for injuries from such causes.⁸

Municipal Supervision and Direction of Repairs. — The fact that authority is given to the municipality or to particular officers to supervise and direct the repairs to be made upon a street railway does not release the company from liability for injuries arising from its failure to keep its railway in repair, though the condition in which it was kept was sanctioned by the municipality or by its particular officers.¹ Where a street-railway company which is required to keep in repair the pavement between its tracks has no authority to change the construction of the pavement as laid by the municipality, it cannot be held liable for injuries caused by a depression in the pavement left by the municipality for drainage purposes.²

Notice of Defects. — Where the defects in the street or railway which it is the duty of the railway to remedy are patent, it cannot escape liability for injuries resulting therefrom if it had no actual knowledge of such defects, as an omission to know that such a defect exists is itself negligence.³

Defects Caused by Acts of Third Persons. — Where the duty is imposed upon a street-railway company to keep in repair certain portions of the street, it may become liable for defects therein though such defects were caused by the acts of third persons.⁴

Proof of Defects. — The general rules of evidence apply with regard to the admissibility of evidence to prove defects in the street and tracks.⁵

Indemnifying Municipality. — The municipality is not released from liability for injuries caused by defects in its streets by reason of the fact that a street-

A street-car company is not entitled to notice of a defect in its track in order to hold it liable for a resulting injury where the defect is patent. In Massachusetts it was held that Pub. Stat. Mass. (1882), c. 113, § 32, requiring a street-railway company to keep in repair the paving and upper planking or other surface material of the portions of streets occupied by its tracks, and in case of unpaved streets an additional space of eighteen inches each side of its track, did not impose upon the company the duty of filling in an excavation made by another, but it was only when such excavation had been filled by the municipality, or other person responsible, to the plane where surface material was required that the duty of the street-railway company began; and that, therefore, where a trench was dug in an unpaved street within eighteen inches of a track of a street-railway company by a person acting under a permit from the city for the construction of a sewer, the railway company was not charged with the duty of keeping in repair any portion of the street within the lines of the trench until it had been filled to a point where a surface was required. Leary v. Boston El. R. Co., 180 Mass. 203. But see Rev. Laws Mass. (1902), c. 112, § 44.

railway company has become bound to remedy such defects.¹ Still, if a recovery is had against the municipality, it may recover of the street-railway company the amount of the judgment recovered against it by the injured person,² together with the costs and expenses reasonably incurred in defending the suit in which the judgment was recovered.³

Contributory Negligence. — Negligence on the part of a person using the street, contributing to injuries sustained by him from defects in the street or tracks which the street-railway company was required to remedy, will, of course, prevent his recovery for such injuries from the company.⁴ But a person using the street has a right to act on the presumption that the street-railway company has performed its duty in keeping its tracks in a safe condition,⁵ and the mere fact that he has knowledge that the street is in a dangerous condition through the negligence of the company does not render his use of the street necessarily negligent.⁶ The question whether the injured person was guilty of contributory negligence is usually for the jury.⁷

Where a street-railway company accept. a license from the municipality to lay and operate its tracks in the streets, the terms and conditions of the license form a contract between the parties; and a reservation by the municipal corporation of the right to revoke the license in case the railroad company fails to comply with its terms does not alter the liability of the railroad company while operating its road under the license. Where, therefore, a judgment is recovered against the municipal corporation for injuries received by a citizen, by reason of the failure of the railroad company to comply with the conditions of the license, the record of the judgment is competent evidence in an action by the municipal corporation against the railroad company, and is conclusive as to the defendant's liability, and as to the amount the plaintiff is entitled to recover, if the defendant had notice of the action against the plaintiff and an opportunity to defend it. *Troy v. A person driving along a track is not, as a matter of law, guilty of negligence in sitting in the centre of a low cart, immediately behind his horse, so that he is unable to observe the upturned end of a rail forming part of the track; but if the rail is plainly visible for a distance of one hundred and fifty feet and should have been observed by him in the exercise of ordinary care, he is guilty of such negligence as will preclude his recovery. Bradwell v. Pittsburg, etc., Pass. R. Co., 153 Pa. St. 105.

In Mahoney v. Metropolitan R. Co., 104 Mass. 73, the plaintiff sought to recover for injuries to himself and horse, caused by the alleged negligence of the defendant in piling snow on each side of the track. It appeared that he was driving a sled heavily loaded with lumber and drawn by two horses, and, seeing the danger in crossing the defendant's tracks, approached them in a cautious manner, using all the care possible; but when partly across, the front runners of his sled being much lower than the rear ones, owing to the bank of hard snow, the load became disengaged and fell forward on the plaintiff and his horses. The court held that the fact of his seeing the obstruction and knowing its dangerous character was not conclusive evidence of negligence on his part, and that it was for the jury to determine whether he was justified in attempting to cross the tracks, and whether he used due care in doing so.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES STREET OR SIDEWALK.—A street is a public way or road in a city or village, as distinguished from public ways or roads in a township or county.¹ The term "street" does not include private ways,² nor roads or ways owned by private corporations, such as toll roads;³ nor does the term include a waterway;⁴ but a bridge over a stream crossing a street has been considered a part of the street.⁵ A street is a public highway,⁶ and as such per se a public place;⁷ but not all highways are streets,⁸ and this has been held true though the highway was located within the limits of a city.¹ The term "road"² or "highway"³ in its broad sense includes streets, but in its more narrow sense the term "highway" does not include streets,⁴ and the same is true with regard to the term "road."⁵

Street and Sidewalk Distinguished.—While the term "street" in its broad sense includes both the roadway for vehicles and the sidewalk for pedestrians,⁶ still when used in its narrow sense it has been held to include only the roadway for vehicles, thereby excluding from the term the sidewalk for pedestrians.⁷ The term "sidewalk," when used to designate a part of a street, means that part of the street intended only for pedestrians, and is thus distinguished from that part of the street set apart especially for vehicles and horsemen.⁸ To constitute a walk a sidewalk it is not essential that it be laid directly upon the ground.⁹ It is immaterial of what kind of material the walk is constructed.¹⁰ The sidewalk is equally with the balance of the street a public highway,¹¹ and a walk for pedestrians beside a private road is not a sidewalk.¹² A cul-de-sac or way open at one end only may be a street.¹³

II. ESTABLISHMENT OF STREETS—1. Dedication.—One of the most frequent means by which streets are established is through dedication; this subject has been fully discussed in another title.¹⁴

3. Incorporation or Annexation of Territory to Municipality. — The general rule is that when a municipal corporation is created it becomes vested with jurisdiction over the territory embraced within its corporate limits, including the parts of established roads of the county,¹ and the same has been held true where territory is annexed to an existing municipality.² It has also been held that the part of a turnpike road taken into a city by an extension of its boundary and accepted by the city becomes a street thereof.³ The fact that the county has made a valuable improvement on one of the streets does not oust the municipality of its jurisdiction over such street when brought within its corporate limits.⁴

4. Statutory Proceedings for Establishment of Streets — a. IN GENERAL. — In the absence of statutory authority municipalities have no power to acquire by compulsory proceedings property for the establishment of streets,⁵ and power merely to regulate and improve streets does not include the power to open and establish new streets and condemn property therefor.⁶ The taking of land for the opening of streets is a taking for a public use and may be authorized by the legislature in the exercise of the power of eminent domain,⁷ and the condemnation of the absolute fee title to land for the purpose of a street may be authorized as well as the condemnation of a mere easement.⁸ The question whether a municipality or particular board has power to establish streets and condemn land for such purposes depends upon the terms of the statute conferring the power,⁹ and power conferred upon a municipality to March 17, 1896, providing for the acquisition by counties of tollpikes and their conversion into free highways, and providing that all turnpikes and gravel roads thus acquired shall become public roads and be maintained and kept in repair by the county, where a turnpike is thus acquired, the part thereof included within the limits of a municipality becomes a street of the municipality to be controlled and maintained by it. Danville v. Fiscal Ct., 106 Ky. 608.

Where a city procures the annexation of territory traversed by a county road, such road becomes a street of the municipality without formal recognition of such fact by the municipal council. Louisville v. Brewer, (Ky. 1903) 72 S. W. Rep. 9.

Bridge. — Where the limits of a city are extended to the opposite bank of a river, so as to embrace a bridge then owned by the county, the bridge becomes part of the city street by which it is approached and thereby ceases to be within any road district as established by the county, or under the control of the county officers, but falls within the jurisdiction of city officers, by whom it is to be kept in repair.

"open" streets has been held to empower it to lay out and establish new streets.¹ Power conferred upon a municipality to establish a street is to be exercised for the public good as circumstances may require, and it cannot by contract abridge such power.²

b. EXERCISE OF POWER—(1) In General.—The power to establish streets is to be exercised in the manner provided by the statutes conferring the power.³ In many instances the statutes have provided for the institution of proceedings for the opening of streets before particular tribunals, such as a particular court, or commissioners, or the city council.⁴ The authority of the special tribunal over such matters is of a judicial nature,⁵ and in order that jurisdiction may be acquired there must be a strict compliance with every prerequisite of the statute, otherwise the proceedings are invalid,⁶ and a statutory provision that in all actions concerning the opening of streets, all proceedings had for that purpose shall be presumed to have been regular and legally taken until the contrary is shown applies only to proceedings had after jurisdiction has been acquired.⁷

(2) Necessity for Street.—While, to authorize the establishment of a street and the condemnation of land therefor, it must be shown to be of public convenience and utility,⁸ still where a special tribunal is made the tribunal to

Power to "Extend."—The fact that the street sought to be established as an "extension" of another street is not a direct continuation of the latter, but makes an offset before starting, does not prevent it from being an "extension." Locust St., 153 Pa. 8. Necessity for Street.—In Michigan, under the constitutional provision requiring the jury determine the necessity for the establishment of a street, its decision, in the absence of fraud or evil practice, will not as a general rule be disturbed,¹ and where a mere power is conferred upon a municipality to open streets and condemn land therefor, it is discretionary with the municipality to refuse to exercise the power with regard to a particular proposed street.²

(3) Petition or Consent of Property Owners.—Statutory provisions requiring a petition or consent on the part of property owners abutting upon the street to be opened must of course be complied with.³

(4) Where Street May Be Located.—Where the statute authorizing the opening of a street expressly fixes the location of the street, this location is, of course, controlling.⁴

Public Property.—A municipality, under general power to open streets and condemn land therefor, has no power to condemn or take land belonging to the state for such purpose.⁵

Sufficiency of Petition.—A California Act (Stat. Cal., 1871-72, p. 911, § 5) requires that the petition to the mayor shall be signed by the "owners of a majority in frontage of the property described in section four of this act, as said names are or shall be named in the last preceding annual assessment roll for the state, city, and county taxes." It was held that the court could not disregard such requirement as to qualification of petitioners, and no signatures of persons whose names do not there appear should be included. It was also held that signatures by executors, administrators, and agents must be excluded, as also must the signatures by the president and secretary of a corporation owning abutting property without competent authority from the corporation. It was further held that the determination of the County Court that a majority of owners had signed the petition was not conclusive, and also that the determination of the mayor that the petition was so signed was not conclusive. Kahn v. San Francisco, 79 Cal. 388.

Verification.—Where the statute required a verification by the city attorney, it was held sufficient for him to swear that the petition was true to the best of his knowledge and belief. Detroit v. Beecher, 75 Mich. 454, 27 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 43.

street over the waters of Lake Michigan, so long as the same does not interfere with navigation, commerce, or the right of fishing.¹

Railroad Property. — Under a general power to establish streets and condemn property for such purpose, streets may be established across the tracks of an ordinary railroad,² but under a general power to open streets it has been held that streets cannot be located longitudinally over the right of way of a railroad company,³ nor under such power can a street be opened through the depot grounds of a railroad company, in such a manner as to destroy or essentially impair the company's enjoyment of the property for railroad purposes.⁴ The legislature may expressly authorize the location of streets through the freight yards of a railroad.⁵

Across Other Streets and Alleys. — Streets may be opened across other streets or public alleys without condemning the land occupied by the streets or alleys so crossed.⁶

Over Existing Highways. — Streets may be established over existing highways such as county roads, within the corporate limits of a municipality, and such a change in use does not impose an additional servitude nor constitute a taking which demands additional compensation.⁷

Turnpike or Toll Road. — Though a turnpike or toll road is a public highway, and the use is of the same nature as the use of streets, still streets may be laid out over such ways.⁸

Property Acquired from Municipality. — As the taking of land for the opening of streets is in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and as the sovereign power of eminent domain cannot be abridged by the acts of any municipality, the legislature may authorize the taking of land for such purpose, though the land is held under a warranty deed from the municipality.⁹

Land Occupied by Buildings. — Under a general power to establish streets and condemn land therefor, the fact that a building is constructed upon the land sought to be condemned is immaterial,¹⁰ and it has been held that a general provision in an act relating to the establishment of "roads," prohibiting the taking of land occupied by a dwelling house for the establishment of a road, did not restrict the general power conferred on a municipality to take land for a street.¹¹

Cemeteries. — In some instances statutes providing for the establishment of streets expressly prohibit the opening of streets through cemeteries or burial grounds.¹²

Over Vacated Streets. — Where a street has been vacated it is then as if no street had been located, and subsequently a new street may be established over the line of the old street.¹³

(5) Width of Street. — In some instances the statutes have limited the width of streets to be opened.¹ In the absence of any express restriction there is no limit in respect of the width of the strip of land to be condemned, save only that in some sense the land taken may be regarded as useful or necessary for the purpose for which it is taken,² and the discretion conferred upon municipalities as to the proper width of streets to be opened is not reviewable.³

(6) Ordinances and Resolutions. — Ordinances and resolutions with regard to the opening of a street must be enacted in compliance with the provision of the statute.⁴

(7) Notices. — The statutes relating to the opening of streets generally provide for the giving of notice of the proceedings to the property owners to be affected thereby,⁵ and where the statute so decrees the property owners must be given an opportunity to be heard.⁶ A statute which authorized the taking of land for opening streets without giving notice to property owners to be affected thereby, and the opportunity to be heard upon the question of compensation, would be unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without due process of law.⁷ Notice must be given to all who have any interest in the land to be taken,⁸ such as lessees,⁹ mortgagees,¹⁰ vendor in an executory contract for the sale of land,¹¹ the heirs of a deceased owner and not his administrator,¹² and a trustee and not the cestui que trust.¹³ Persons acquiring interests in land to be taken, after the institution of the proceedings for opening the street, need not be made parties.¹⁴ In the absence of a constitutional provision to the contrary, the legislature may authorize local officers to determine certain preliminary matters in regard to the opening of streets, such as the line of the proposed street, the necessity for it, and the mode of constructing it, without notice to the landowners,¹⁵ but if the constitution provides that these questions shall be submitted to a judicial tribunal, notice is necessary.¹⁶

Waiver of Notice. — Property owners whose lands are to be taken for opening a street may waive their right to notice, and it is generally held that where a property owner enters a full appearance to the proceedings, without having received notice, he will be deemed to have waived it.¹⁷

Manner of Giving Notice. — Statutory provisions as to the manner of giving notice must be complied with.¹⁸ It is competent for the legislature to provide

In Maryland, in answer to the objection that the proceedings of street commissioners for the establishment of streets were invalid because before the conclusion of the proceedings two members of the commission went out of office and were succeeded by other members, it was held that the acts of the commissioners were in no respect personal, but to every intent and purpose official, and that therefore, as in case of acts of other municipal officials, after a change in the members of the board, the board as a whole would proceed to complete the establishment and opening of the street. *Central Sav. Under City Charter. — Hough v. Bridgeport, 57 Conn. 290.

Where a city charter required the damages for street openings to be assessed by three freeholders, and one of the three viewers appointed was not a freeholder, it was held that the appointment was not void. The mistake was in the confirmation of their report, which had the effect of a judgment and could not be inquired into collaterally. Pittsburg v. Cluley, 74 Pa. St. 262.

Where the statute provides for notice and the hearing of objections to the report before final the time fixed by the statutes,¹ and the council must take the required action thereon when filed.²

(9) Locating and Opening.—Where a petition by property owners is the basis of the power of the municipal officers to establish the street, such officers have no right to change the location of the proposed street as described in the petition.³ In some instances the statutes expressly require the opening of the street to be made within a specified time after the condemnation of the land.⁴ But it has been held that the neglect of a municipality to open a street within a reasonable time after acquiring the land for it gives no right of action for damages against the municipality by property owners whose land has been taken.⁵

Property Owner's Right to Remove Building.—Where in the condemnation of land for a street the owner of land occupied by a building is given the privilege of moving the building provided such removal is done as soon as necessary for the purpose of making the street, such owner is not entitled to further notice to remove the building, but must himself observe the progress in the construction of the street, and remove the building in time to avoid delay in such construction.⁶

(10) Compensation for Land Taken.—Where land is condemned for a street, the owner is, of course, as in other instances where land is condemned for a public use, entitled to compensation, and this is true although the land was already burdened with an easement of a private way.⁷

Conversion of Alley into Street.—Since a street furnishes the same access to abutting lots as an alley, the taking of an alley for the purpose of opening a action thereon all objections to the form of the report not made in the manner prescribed by the statute will be deemed waived. McKusick v. Stillwater, 44 Minn. 372.

Where, under the charter of a city, the report of the city surveyor must contain the plat of the survey of the street, a statement in such report that the plat of such survey is "shown on the plat on file with the recorder" is insufficient. Ladd v. East Portland, 18 Oregon 87.

determining the compensation to be made for land taken for a street must, of course, be strictly complied with.¹

Jury Trial. — In the absence of any statutory or constitutional provision to the contrary, a property owner whose land is taken for a street is not entitled as a matter of right to a jury trial for the determination of the amount of his compensation, but the determination of such compensation may be intrusted to a special tribunal.² In some instances, constitutional provisions expressly confer the right to a trial by jury for the determination of the amount of compensation,³ but even in such cases the right is sufficiently protected by providing for the assessment of compensation by a special tribunal in the first instance and giving to property owners the right to appeal from the award of such tribunal and the right to a jury trial on such appeal.⁴

Measure of Compensation. — As a general rule, the measure of compensation for land taken for a street is the market value of the land, or when a part of a tract is taken the difference between the market value as a whole before the taking and the value of the part remaining after the taking;⁵ and where a street was laid out across the right of way of a railroad, the measure of damages has been held to be the amount of decrease in the value of the use of the land taken for railroad purposes caused by its use for the purposes of a street.⁶ Where the legislature intrusts to commissioners the determination of the amount of compensation to be awarded for land taken, the courts will not, as a general rule, interfere with their decision upon such question.⁷

Deduction for Benefits. — Where part of a tract of land is taken for a street the special benefits accruing to the residue of the land may be deducted from the value of the land taken.⁸

the street was established in the first instance by dedication or by condemnation under powers of eminent domain,¹ or that special assessments were levied to pay the expense of originally establishing the street.² Power to vacate streets will not be implied from a general power of self-government.³ Under power to vacate streets a municipality may vacate a strip along the side of a street as distinguished from the vacation of the entire street.⁴

Consent of the Abutting Property Owners is not, unless expressly made so by the statutes, essential to the exercise of the power to vacate streets,⁵ but the statutes, in many instances, require a petition or consent on the part of property owners as a prerequisite to the vacation of streets.⁶

2. Exercise of Power. — Where power to vacate streets is conferred upon a municipality, its action in the exercise of the power is discretionary,⁷ and where such power is conferred upon a municipality "whenever the public interest or convenience may require," its determination that public convenience requires a street to be closed is conclusive and is not open to review by the courts.⁸ If the vacation of a street by a municipality is the result of fraud and collusion, the action may be impeached and avoided.⁹ The vacation of a street for a valuable consideration paid to the municipality by an individual to be benefited thereby has been held invalid,¹⁰ but the fact that one of the reasons for vacating a street was to accommodate an individual is not such a fraud as will invalidate the action of the municipality.¹¹ Where a municipality attempts to vacate a street, property owners not abutting thereon have no grounds for objecting to the validity or cate and establish streets and alleys, and to vacate the same," may vacate any street, and the right to vacate is not confined to the streets which the city may "locate and establish." Gray v. Iowa Land Co., 26 Iowa 387.

In Knapp v. St. Louis, 156 Mo. 343, it was said that the vacation of a portion of a street by a municipality at the instigation of a corporation, that the corporation may use such vacated portion in the extension of its premises, is not such a fraud as will authorize the courts to invalidate the ordinance. Compare Van Witsen v. Gutman, 79 Md. 405, where the vacation of an alley so as to enable the owner of property on both sides to erect a continuous building over the closed portion of the alley without regard to public convenience and welfare was held invalid.

That vacation proceedings are had by a village board at the instance and request, and primarily for the benefit, of owners whose property would be benefited by the vacation, is not ground for declaring the action void on the ground of fraud. Bellevue v. Bellevue Imp. Co., (Neb. 1902) 90 N. W. Rep. 1002.

regularity of the proceedings nor the right to an injunction restraining such vacation.¹ A municipality in exercising the power to vacate streets must, as a general rule, comply strictly with the provisions of the statute conferring the power.²

Notice.—When notice to property owners of the vacation of streets is required, the requirement is obligatory,³ but notice may be waived by acquiescence without notice.⁴ In the absence of statutory requirement, it has been held that the municipality may act without notice.⁵

Submission of Vacation to Vote.—In some instances the statutes have required the question as to the vacation of streets to be submitted to popular vote.⁶

3. Compensation for Vacation.—The owners of lots bordering upon a street have an easement of way in the street in addition to the use in common with the public generally. This additional right of way is private property within the protection of the law, and cannot by the abandonment of the rights of the public in the street be destroyed without due compensation,⁷ and in some instances statutes authorizing the vacation of a street have expressly provided for compensation to abutting property owners.¹ It is generally held that owners of property not abutting on the street vacated have no such property in the street as entitles them to damages for its vacation where there is still left means of communication with other streets, and whatever detriment or inconvenience they may suffer by the closing of the street they must bear in common with the community at large for the public convenience and welfare.² In some cases, however, it has been held that the right to compensation is not confined to instances of an actual vacation and closing of the part of the street on which the property stands; it extends likewise to one injured in the market value of his property by the vacating of the street on one side only, so that his property is left at the end of a cul-de-sac.³

The Measure of Damages recoverable for the vacation of a street is the diminution in the market value of the property by reason of the property owner's loss of access.⁴ Only special damages suffered by a property owner through the vacation of a street are recoverable and not such as are common to the public.⁵

The Prepayment of Compensation to abutting property owners is not a requisite to the legal vacation of the street.⁶

The Manner of Determining the Damages from the vacation of streets is generally regulated by statutes.⁷

Although the owners of lots abutting upon a street cannot be deprived of ingress and egress to and from the same without compensation, yet when such street is vacated by the corporate authorities, upon their petition to have this done, they will be estopped from asserting that an easement remains in the corporation for their benefit, and cannot invoke the principle in defense to an action of ejectment by the owner of such vacated street to recover possession. *Gebhardt v. 4. Effect of Vacation. — Where the fee to a street is in the municipality, upon its vacation the title still remains in the municipality,¹ but where the municipality has only an easement in the land covered by the street, the land reverts to the owners of the fee.² In the dedication of a street a provision that upon the vacation of the street the land shall revert to the dedicator is, of course, binding.³ In some instances the statutes have expressly provided that in the event of the vacation of a street the adjacent lots shall extend to the central line of the street, or the street be divided in accordance with the equities.⁴

5. Repeal of Vacation. — After the power to vacate a street has been duly exercised, the municipality cannot by a repeal of the vacating ordinance amend its action in vacating the street.⁵

IV. ABANDONMENT AND NONUSER. — The courts have frequently spoken of the loss of public rights in streets by abandonment,⁶ but the intention to abandon must be evident.⁷ Abandonment does not necessarily follow from a nonuser⁸ or from acquiescence in the erection of buildings or other obstruction upon the street,¹ or the inclosure of the street,² or that taxes are paid upon the land over which the street is located by an individual,³ or from a delay in opening a street after dedication,⁴ or in improving the street.⁵ In some instances the statutes require, where streets are established, that possession thereof must be taken by the municipality within a specified time and that upon nonuser as highways for a specified time they shall cease to be streets.⁶

Adverse Possession. — Under the general principle heretofore announced prohibiting the loss of public rights by adverse possession,⁷ it is held by the weight of authority, though the decisions are conflicting, that adverse possession of a portion of a street, no matter how long continued, has no effect by reason of the provisions of the statute of limitations to bar the city of the right to be restored to the possession of the street to the full width thereof. The title to the street is vested in the city in its governmental capacity, to hold for the use of the public, and the statute of limitations does not run in favor of the individual to bar the right of the public.⁸

V. IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS — 1. Power to Improve — a. IN GENERAL. — Power to improve and repair their streets is generally expressly conferred upon municipalities,⁹ and has been considered to be implied from the general power to control streets and from the duty to keep them in repair,¹⁰ as well as from a general welfare clause in the charter of the municipality.¹¹

"Repair." — The power to "repair" streets does not include the making of an original improvement of a street, or work of a different character from that previously done thereon.¹²

Relinquishment of Power. — The power conferred on a municipality to improve its streets is held in trust for the public, and the municipality cannot abrogate it by contract.¹³

Drains and Sewers. — While the power to construct necessary drains and sewers is generally expressly conferred, the right to construct drains to carry off surface water from the streets has been implied under the general power to improve streets.¹⁴

Gridding Portion of Street — The general power to control and improve streets has been held to authorize sodding the centre of a street so as to make a park thereof, where its entire width is not needed for public travel.¹

Bridges. — Under power to grade, pave, and otherwise improve streets, it has been held that the municipality had no power to erect in a street a bridge over railroad tracks.² The power to build necessary bridges upon streets is, however, generally expressly conferred upon municipalities.³

Nature of Improvement. — Where the power to control and improve its streets is conferred upon a municipality, in the exercise of this power the nature of the improvement must to a large extent be left to the discretion of the municipality,⁴ and unless restricted by statute it may, after adopting a general plan for the improvement of its streets, change such plan during the making of the improvement.⁵

The Question What Streets or Portions Thereof May Be Improved has called for the construction of particular statutes.⁶ Under a general power to improve its streets, the municipality is not required to improve a particular street throughout its entire length, but may confine the improvement to what it deems the necessities of the public at the time to require.⁷ Where the power is merely to improve its streets, the municipality has no power to improve private ways.⁸

b. PAVING. — Power to pave streets is generally expressly conferred upon municipalities,⁹ as is also the power to repave where the original paving has become worn out.¹⁰ The power to pave and repave streets has been held to be necessarily implied from general powers to control the use of streets and improve them.¹¹ The legislature may authorize municipalities to require abutting property owners to pave and keep in repair the portion of the streets upon which their property abuts.¹²

Necessity and Character of Paving. — The necessity for paving a street is generally left to the discretion of the municipality,¹³ and the same is true with regard to the character or nature of the paving to be laid¹ and the portion of the street to be paved.² And under some statutes the abutting owners are permitted to select the kind of paving to be laid.³

Prior Establishment of Grade. — In some instances the statutes require the municipality to establish the grade of its streets before exercising the power to pave,⁴ but in the absence of such a statutory requirement the prior establishment of the grade of the street and the construction of the street to such grade are not conditions precedent to the exercise of the power to pave.⁵

Prior Construction of Water and Gas Pipes and Sewers. — In the absence of statutory requirement, a municipality is not required, before exercising its power to pave streets, to provide for the laying of necessary water mains and sewers.⁶ But the statutes may require the construction of sewers and the laying of gas and water pipes in the street before the power to pave can be exercised.⁷

c. SIDEWALKS. — Express power to construct sidewalks⁸ and to fix the curb line or width of sidewalks to be constructed⁹ is generally conferred on municipalities. The term "street," as heretofore stated, is generic, embracing sidewalks, and power to improve "streets" includes authority to improve sidewalks.¹⁰ The statutes frequently expressly authorize municipalities to compel the abutting property owners to construct sidewalks or to pay the cost of their construction,¹¹ but it has been held that in the absence of statutory provision this duty cannot be imposed on abutting owners.¹ Under power to construct or to compel property owners to construct sidewalks, the municipality has no authority to construct other improvements not necessarily a part thereof.² In the absence of statutory liability a municipality is under no duty to construct sidewalks upon its streets.³

Privilege of Property Owner to Construct. — In some instances, where sidewalks are to be constructed at the expense of the abutting property owners, the statutes give to such owners the privilege of performing the work within a specified time, and prohibit the municipality within such time from constructing the walk at the cost of the owner.⁴

Necessity and Character of Sidewalk. — Where a municipality has general power to compel the construction of sidewalks, the kind or character of walk to be constructed is a matter within its discretion,⁵ and the same is true with regard to the necessity and utility of the walk.⁶ In some instances, however, the action of municipalities in requiring property owners to replace sidewalks

d. GRADING.—Express power to grade their streets is usually conferred on municipalities.² Under a general power conferred to improve and keep in repair its streets, it has been held that the municipality has implied authority to grade, cutting down hills and filling up hollows,³ and the same has been held with regard to power to "alter and amend" streets.⁴ The general power to grade its streets is a continuing power, authorizing the municipality to alter the grade established from time to time as the public welfare requires.⁵ In exercising this power the determining of the grade is a legislative or judicial act, and cannot be controlled by the courts.⁶ The legislature may impose a mandatory duty upon a municipality to bring a street to a certain grade.⁷

e. WIDENING AND ALTERING.—The power to widen streets and condemn the necessary land for such purpose,⁸ as well as to vacate portions of streets so as to make them narrower,⁹ is frequently expressly conferred on municipalities. In the absence of legislative authorization a municipality has no power to condemn land to widen streets,¹ nor has it power to make its streets narrower.² The manner in which the power to alter streets shall be exercised is a matter of statutory regulation.³

2. Exercise of Power—a. IN GENERAL.—The statutes usually prescribe the manner in which the power to make street improvements shall be exercised,⁴ and the general rule that where a power is conferred upon a municipality, and the manner in which that power is to be exercised is prescribed, such requirements must be complied with,⁵ applies fully with regard to the exercise of a power to make street improvements.⁶

b. DISCRETION IN EXERCISE OF POWER.—In determining whether the power to improve its streets shall be exercised, the municipality acts in a legislative or judicial character, and the advisability of its action as regards the utility or necessity of the proposed improvement cannot be inquired into, nor can the exercise of the power be controlled by the courts.⁷ The mere case, the city council cannot make the minutes of the board as kept by the clerk thereof the sole or conclusive evidence of the action of the board.⁴

f. RESOLUTION OF INTENTION TO MAKE OR NECESSITY FOR IMPROVEMENT. — In some instances the statutes require that before the power to make street improvements shall be exercised a preliminary resolution shall be passed by the city council expressing its intention to make the described improvement⁵ or declaring the necessity therefor.⁶ But in the absence of statutory requirement such a resolution is not necessary.⁴

Enactment and Notice. — The manner in which such a resolution shall be enacted is controlled by statute,⁵ as is also the necessity of notice thereof.⁶

g. PETITION OR CONSENT OF PROPERTY OWNERS. — Many statutes require as a condition precedent to the exercise of the power to make street improvements that a petition be filed by a certain proportion of the property amount of property abutting upon the improvement.¹ Where a petition is required, its filing is jurisdictional, and a finding of the municipal authorities that a sufficient petition has been filed is prima facie evidence of the fact,² but is not conclusive³ in the absence of legislative provision to that effect.⁴

Where a Petition for a Particular Improvement is filed, the municipality cannot change the character of the improvement and make the petition the basis for a different improvement.⁵

Writing and Signature.—Where a petition by the property owners is required, there must be a written petition,⁶ signed by the owners of the property or their duly authorized agents.⁷ A married man may as owner sign with regard to his own property without his wife joining,⁸ but he cannot sign with regard to his wife's property.¹ A lessee holding under a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, has been held to be so far the owner as to qualify him to petition for the improvement,² but a life tenant cannot sign as owner of the entire property,³ nor can a tenant in common sign except as owner of his own undivided interest.⁴ Neither an administrator with regard to land owned by his decedent,⁵ nor an executor⁶ with regard to property owned by his testator, though he has under the will a power of sale, is qualified as a petitioner. Trustees may sign as owners of the trust property,⁷ and guardians have been held to be authorized to sign with regard to the property of their wards.⁸ A conveyance by a property owner after the signing of the petition does not affect his qualification as a petitioner.⁹

Withdrawal of Consent. — In some instances statutes have expressly restricted the right of a petitioner for a street improvement to revoke his consent,¹⁰ but in the absence of such a restriction it has been held that revocation can be made at any time before the municipal authorities have acted upon the petition.¹¹

h. SUBMISSION OF QUESTION TO POPULAR VOTE. — The legislature has plenary power to authorize municipalities to make street improvements without submitting to popular vote the question whether the improvement shall be made,¹² but statutes may require the making of particular improvements to be submitted to the electors of the municipality.¹³

i. NOTICES OF PROPOSED IMPROVEMENT. — Statutory provisions requiring the giving of notice of an intended street improvement must be complied with to render valid the exercise of the power to make the improvement,¹⁴ but in the absence of a statutory requirement no notice is required.¹⁵

Time of Notice. — The statutes generally provide the time at which the notice must be given,¹⁶ but the fact that a notice was given for a longer time than

To Whom Notice to Be Given. — The question to whom the notice must be given is a matter of statutory regulation.²

The Form of Notice is regulated by statute.³

Service of Notice. — The notices are to be given in the manner provided by the statutes.⁴

Adjournments. — Where the required notice of a public hearing upon the question of a proposed improvement is duly given, additional notices are not required in case the hearing is adjourned to regular fixed times.⁵

j. PROTESTS OR REMONSTRANCES AGAINST IMPROVEMENT. — The statutes sometimes provide that after a resolution of intention to make a street improvement, property owners to be affected thereby may file protests or remonstrances against the contemplated action.⁶ Under other statutes provision is made for allowing to property owners a public hearing upon the question whether the proposed improvement shall be made.¹ The statutes describe the persons qualified to protest against the making of the improvement and the requisite number of protestants.² Protests or remonstrances must be filed within the time allowed by statute.³ The effect of a proper protest or remonstrance is, under some statutes, to deprive the municipality of the right to exercise the power to make the improvement.⁴ Under other statutes the object of allowing a hearing to property owners is merely to give them an opportunity to present their objections to the making of the improvement, leaving the making of the improvement discretionary with the municipal officers.⁵ In the absence of any statutory provision property owners to be affected by a street improvement are not entitled to a hearing upon the question whether the improvement shall be made.⁶

6. ESTIMATE OF COST OF IMPROVEMENT.—The statutes frequently require a preliminary estimate to be made of the cost of the improvement,⁷ and generally provide by whom such estimate shall be made.⁸ In the absence of a statutory requirement there is no necessity for a preliminary estimate.⁹

1. ORDINANCES DIRECTING OR ORDERING IMPROVEMENT — (1) In General. — The power conferred upon a city council to make street improvements is, as a rule, to be exercised, as in the case of other general powers, by an ordinance directing the making of the improvement, and this is, of course, especially true when the statutes require the exercise of the power by ordinance.¹ In some cases it has been held, however, that the power could be exercised by a resolution, an ordinance being unnecessary.²

(2) Enactment. — The manner in which ordinances directing street improvements are to be enacted is a matter of statutory regulation.³ They must, of course, be passed by the requisite number of votes, and the statutes in some states require a greater vote than a majority, in some instances as high as a two-thirds vote.⁴

Publication of Ordinance. — When required by statute the ordinance must, of course, be published.¹

(3) Requisites as to Form and Sufficiency. — The ordinance must, in positive terms, direct that the improvement be made,² but it need not recite or indicate the act of the legislature conferring the power to make the improvement.³

Necessity for Improvement. — In the absence of a statutory requirement it is not necessary that the ordinance or resolution contain a recital that the improvement is deemed necessary, since the action of the council in ordering the improvement of itself implies a determination of necessity and propriety.⁴

Description of Improvements. — While the ordinance need not specify every minute particular of the improvement directed,⁵ it should, nevertheless, contain a general description of the locality, character, and nature thereof, to enable the work to be carried out through the ministerial officers of the municipality to whom it is intrusted; and the statutes often expressly so require.⁶ The description may be made by reference to maps, plans, specifications, etc., on record or filed,¹ and may employ words which have a well-defined meaning in the locality.² It is not necessary to express in the ordinance that the place where the work is to be done is within the corporate limits of the municipality, though the power to make the improvement may be dependent upon such fact, as it will be presumed that the municipality has not exceeded its territorial jurisdiction.³

Improvements Which May Be Included in Single Ordinance.—While several distinct street improvements are not to be provided for by a single ordinance,⁴ still, the grading and paving of a street may constitute a single improvement and not distinct enterprises within this rule.⁵ So the paving of several streets may be provided for in a single ordinance.⁶

m. PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS OF IMPROVEMENT.—The statutes frequently require as a preliminary requisite to the exercise of the power to make street improvements that plans and specifications of the proposed work be prepared.⁷

n. MODE OF MAKING IMPROVEMENT — (1) In General. — Where the statutes prescribe the mode in which the improvement shall be made, the prescribed mode must be followed.¹ In the absence of any statutory regulation, the municipality may make the improvement either by the employment of laborers and the purchase of the necessary materials or by letting a contract for the work;² but it is often provided that the improvement shall be made by letting a contract therefor to the lowest bidder.³

(2) Opportunity to Property Owners to Make Improvement. — Where street improvements are to be paid for by the abutting property owners, the statutes frequently require that an opportunity to make a proposed improvement be given to such abutting owners before the municipality can make it at their expense.⁴

o. DEFRAYING COST OF IMPROVEMENT. — The construction of improvements such as paving, laying sidewalks, grading, etc., is an object of public utility which may be provided for by general taxation or appropriation of the general public funds.⁵ Where a municipality has general power to make street improvements without express limitations as to the means by which the cost thereof shall be defrayed, it has power to contract to pay therefor in cash from its general funds,⁶ and a mere permissive right to require abutting lot owners to pay the cost does not prohibit such a contract.⁷ Where the statute expressly provides that a certain proportion of the cost of the improvement shall be borne by the abutting owners, it has been held that the municipality may contract an indebtedness for the entire cost and collect from the property owners their proportion thereof.⁸ The statutes often expressly provide by what means the revenue to defray the cost of street improvements shall be raised,¹ and such means are frequently held to be exclusive.² Where a discretionary power is given to the municipality to determine the means by which such revenue shall be raised, the courts cannot control the exercise of the power.³ The right of the municipality to issue bonds or to levy special assessments to defray the cost of street improvements has been heretofore fully discussed.⁴

p. ABANDONMENT OF IMPROVEMENT. — Where the municipality has discretionary power to make a street improvement, it may abandon an improvement ordered and repeal the ordinance authorizing it,⁵ or it may during the construction of the improvement change the general plan thereof.⁶

q. RESTRAINING STREET IMPROVEMENT. — Where the making of an unauthorized improvement will result in irreparable injury to the property, and the remedy at law is inadequate,⁷ or where the improvement is to be made at the expense of the property owners and may result in casting a cloud on the title,⁸ courts of equity have granted injunctions. But the fact that no irreparable injury is threatened or that the remedy at law is adequate is, as in other cases, ground for the denial of the injunction.⁹

3. Damages for Street Improvement — a. IN GENERAL. — Under constitutional provisions prohibiting damage or injury to property for a public use without compensation, abutting property owners who sustain special injuries from the construction of street improvements are held to be entitled to recompense therefor,¹⁰ as, for example, where a bridge or similar obstruction is erected in a street impairing or depriving the property owner of his right of access or easement for light and air.¹ But a property owner who does not receive any direct injury from the construction of the improvement is not entitled to compensation for indirect injuries which he may suffer in common with the general public.² Thus he is not entitled to compensation because the public traffic along the street in front of his property has been diverted, as he has no legal interest in the amount of general travel along the street.³ The constitutional provision that no man's property shall be "taken" without compensation does not confer upon abutting owners a right to compensation for consequential injuries from the improvement of streets where there is no actual invasion or taking of their property.⁴

Temporary Obstruction of Access. — An abutting owner is not entitled to compensation by reason of obstruction of access to his building during the progress of a street improvement, such obstruction being merely a burden incidentally imposed and without which improvements could seldom be made.⁵

Lateral Support. — Invasion of the property owner's right of lateral support in the making of street improvements has been fully discussed elsewhere in this work.⁶

Negligence in Construction of Street Improvements. — Where a municipal corporation is negligent in the construction of a street improvement it is liable in tort for injuries to abutting owners caused thereby,⁷ and this liability extends to negligence in devising plans for the improvement as well as to negligence in executing them.⁸ But the municipality is only required to use reasonable care to avoid liability.⁹

Diversion of Surface Waters.—While the municipality cannot collect surface waters and discharge them upon abutting property in large quantities without liability,¹ the mere fact that the flow of surface water is obstructed or diverted by improvements does not render the municipality liable.²

Trespasses.—A municipality has been held liable for trespasses upon the property of abutting owners, committed in the construction of a street improvement.³

A Lessee is entitled to compensation for injuries to the value of his term to the same extent as the owner of a freehold estate in the land.⁴

The Measure of Damages for consequential injuries to abutting property from the construction of an improvement is the diminution in the market value of the property as affected thereby.⁵

Waiver of Claim for Damages—Filing Claim.—In some instances the statutes require property owners who may be entitled to compensation for injuries from street improvements to file their claims therefor within a certain time.⁶

b. DAMAGES FOR CHANGE OF STREET GRADE—(1) General Right to Damages.—Where a municipality, without exceeding its authority, changes the grade of a street, any resulting injury to abutting owners is, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision to the contrary, regarded as damnum absque injuria for which no compensation can be recovered.⁷ But in the great majority of cases a provision for compensation where property is "damaged" has been held to permit a recovery for losses resulting from a change of grade.¹ The right of recovery is not dependent on ownership of the fee in the street² or upon the question whether the change of grade was from the natural surface or from a prior established grade.³ Such a constitutional provision is not to have a retroactive effect so as to confer a right to compensation for changes of grade theretofore made.⁴ Where there has been no actual change of grade, the mere passage of an ordinance providing for regrading does not entitle the property owner to damages.⁵ So persons whose property does not abut upon

Construction of Viaduct.—In Colclough v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 182, it was held that the construction of an elevated approach to a viaduct occupying the entire width of the street constituted merely a change in the grade of the street, and that therefore, in the absence of an express statute allowing it, no damages could be claimed by property owners for injuries to their property caused by the construction of such viaduct.

Such a provision of the constitution entitles property owners injured by reason of a change of the grade of a street to compensation only in instances in which a private individual would have been liable to compensate the property owner if similar work had been done by such individual upon his own property. Thus, the fact that a change in the grade of a street prevents the surface water from flowing off a lot does not give the lot owner a right to compensation. Jordan v. Benwood, 42 W. Va. 312, 57 Am. St. Rep. 859.

the part of the street graded are not entitled to damages, as the only injury which they may suffer is in common with the public.¹ In grading streets the municipality is liable for direct injuries to the property of abutting owners, as where, in raising the grade, dirt is cast upon such property,² or where, in case of a cut, the slope is on the abutting lot.³

Lateral Support.— Since an owner of land has no right to lateral support for buildings and improvements on his land,⁴ he is not entitled to recover when the grading removes the lateral support of his buildings;⁵ but he cannot be deprived of the lateral support of his land in its natural condition.⁶

Promise to Compensate.— It has been held that where there is no liability on the part of a municipality to compensate abutting owners for injuries from a change of the grade of a street, its promise to give compensation therefor is unenforceable.⁷

Where an Unauthorized Change of Grade Is Made under the direction of the municipal authorities, the municipality is liable for injuries resulting to abutting property therefrom;⁸ and where a municipality changes the grade of a street, it cannot, to defeat the claim of an abutting owner for compensation, set up defects in its own proceeding for the change.⁹

A Municipality Is Liable for Negligence in performing the work of changing the grade of a street.¹⁰

The Mere Lowering of the Grade of the Gutter a few inches, the curb elevation being left undisturbed, is not a change of grade of the street so as to entitle the abutting owner to compensation. Coates v. Dubuque, 68 Iowa 550.

Where in the Original Laying Out of a Street the Grade Is Fixed on the plan of the street, a subsequent working of the street to such grade is not such a change in the grade of the street as will entitle the property owner to damages under Gen. Stat. Mass., c. 44, §§ 19, 20 (Pub. Stat., c. 52, §§ 15, 16). Brady v. Fall River, 121 Mass. 262.

Where the Established Grade of a Street Falls Away, Either Gradually or Suddenly, the restoration of the street to the established grade is not a change in the grade entitling a property owner to damages under Pub. Stat. Mass., c. 52, § 15. Garrity v. Boston, 161 Mass. 530. See also Whitmore v. Tarrytown, 137 N. Y. 409, reversing 62 Hun (N. Y.) 619.

been held that such statutes should be liberally construed for the benefit of the property owners.¹ Thus statutes providing for compensation to abutting property owners where the grade of a "street" is changed have been held to include the change of grade of a sidewalk.² Such statutes will not be construed as retroactive, however, so as to allow the recovery of compensation for injuries sustained prior to their enactment.³

Necessity for Prior Establishment of Grade. — Under some statutes compensation is allowed only where the street is changed from an established grade;⁴ but a statute giving a claim for damages resulting from a change or alteration of grade includes a change in the first instance from the natural grade, no artificial grade having been established by the municipality.⁵

Necessity for Improvement of Property. — Under some statutes compensation can be claimed only by property owners who have improved their property prior to the change of grade.⁶

Liability of Contractor. — Where a contractor performs the work of grading a street with proper care, he incurs no personal liability for the compensation of abutting property owners.⁷

(2) Measure of Damages. — Where damages are recoverable for injuries from the change of grade, the measure of recovery is, as a general rule, the difference between the market value of the property before and after the change as effected by the change.⁸ But the mere fact that the property is

Under such a statute, where a grade is established other than the original surface of the street, a subsequent change of grade to the original surface is a change from an established grade, so as to entitle to damages a property owner who has improved his property with respect to the prior established grade. Resseguieu v. Sioux City, 94 Iowa 543.

To constitute an established grade within the meaning of Code Iowa, § 469, giving to property owners a claim for damages where the "established" grade of a street is changed, the grade must have been properly established by ordinance or other legislative action; the mere improvement of the street is insufficient to render its grade an established grade. Kepple v. Keokuk, 61 Iowa 653.

In New York it has been held that a street grade may be considered "established" (Amsterdam City Charter, Laws 1885, c. 131, § 95) by general user, as well as by ordinance. Folmsbee v. Amsterdam, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 214, affirmed 142 N. Y. 118.

worth as much after the grading as before does not necessarily deprive the owner of the right to compensation, since this may be the result of a general advance in values throughout the locality irrespective of the grading or dependent upon some other municipal improvement.¹ On the other hand, as the market value after the change of grade is not limited to the value for the purpose for which the property is used, but its value for any and all purposes is considered,² a diminution in the value of the property for some particular use is not necessarily a damage entitling the property owner to compensation, since the grading of a street may impair the desirability or salability of abutting property for one use, while at the same time it may render such property more desirable for another use, so as in fact to increase its market value.³

In Estimating the Diminution in the Value of abutting property from a change of grade, improvements upon the lots are to be taken into consideration,⁴ but otherwise of improvements made with notice of the proposed change.⁵ The destruction of sidewalks erected by the property owner in front of his premises,¹ and of shade trees,² should be taken into consideration. The cost of grading or otherwise adjusting abutting property to the changed grade of the street is not of itself recoverable as a distinct element of damages,³ but may be considered as an element tending to show diminution in value.⁴ In fact, all circumstances logically tending to show diminution in the value of the property should be admitted in evidence.⁵

Benefits.—As the measure of damages is diminution in value, the benefits inuring to the property from the change of grade are to be considered;⁶ but from the benefits should be deducted the cost to the owner of the improvement, as, for instance, the amount of a special assessment paid by him.⁷ Only benefits accruing by reason of the change of grade are to be regarded.⁸ Thus, benefits accruing by reason of improvements made by an adjoining lot owner cannot be considered,⁹ and it has been held that the benefits to be taken into account are only such as are special, and do not include general benefits received in common with the public at large.¹⁰

Interest.—It has been held that where the municipality fails to assess the damages resulting from a change of grade, the property owner is entitled in an action therefor to interest on the amount of his damages from the time of the actual change.¹¹

In Mitigation of the Damages recoverable it has been held admissible to show in evidence intended further improvements from which the property will derive benefit.¹²

(3) Who Entitled to Compensation. — Only persons are entitled to compensation who have an interest in the property injured¹ at the time when the grade is changed.² A subsequent conveyance of the property does not affect the right.³ Where the statutes provide for compensation to "persons interested in the land injured" a lessee is included.⁴

(4) Determination of Compensation. — As a general rule the statutes expressly provide the manner in which the compensation is to be determined.⁵

Though the statute provides methods by which the municipality by proceedings in invitum may assess the compensation to which a property owner is entitled for a change in grade, this does not deprive the municipality of the power to submit the question to arbitration.¹

Notice of Proceedings to Assess Damages. — The statutory requirements with regard to notice to property owners in proceedings to assess damages for the change of the grade of a street must, of course, be complied with,² and even when the statute makes no such provision it has been held that notice and an opportunity to be heard must be given to property owners, since the question of compensation is essentially judicial.³

(5) Time of Paying Compensation. — A prepayment to property owners of compensation for injury which they will suffer by reason of a change in the grade of a street is not a condition precedent to the exercise of the power to change the grade unless made so by statute.⁴ When such statutes exist, a property owner is entitled to an injunction restraining the change of grade until his compensation is paid or tendered.⁵

(6) Waiver of Claim for Compensation. — It is generally held that an abutting property owner waives his claim for compensation for a change of grade by signing a petition requesting that the change be made⁶ or by expressly assenting thereto after the work of grading is begun.⁷ But he is not deprived of his right to compensation merely by soliciting the municipal authorities to adopt particular methods in the work⁸ or by requesting that the grading be completed when it has been partly done.⁹

Where the Municipality Is Required to Make Compensation Before Grading, a property owner does not waive his right to compensation by failure to enjoin the grading until his compensation is estimated and paid.¹⁰

Negligence. — The fact that a property owner petitioned for the grading of a street does not waive his claim for damages by reason of the negligent manner in which the work is done.¹¹

Waiver of Claim for Property to Establish Street.—The waiver of a claim for damages for property taken to establish a street does not waive a claim for compensation for grading it.¹

Claim for Damages.—In the absence of any statutory requirement, the property owner is not required to notify the municipality that he will claim damages for a proposed change in the grade of a street.² In some instances, however, the statutes have required all claims for damages to be filed within a prescribed time.³

(7) Remedy of Landowners.—Where the statute giving the right to damages provides the method for the enforcement of the claim, the property owner must resort to such remedy,⁴ and where such proceedings are duly taken the property owner is concluded thereby.⁵ Where the statutes require a municipality in exercising its power to change the grade of streets to have the damages to property owners assessed, if the municipality fails in this duty the property owner may maintain an action at law for such damages.⁶ Where the remedy for the recovery of damages is not provided by the statute giving the right thereto, an action at law may be maintained therefor,⁷ and the same is true under a constitutional provision giving a claim for damages for property injured for a public purpose.¹

VI. CONTROL, REGULATION, AND USE OF STREETS — 1. General Control of Streets — a. IN GENERAL. — The paramount control over the streets is vested in the legislature.² This power of control the legislature may delegate, and as a general rule has delegated, to the several municipalities,³ though in some cases the power has been delegated to other public bodies or officers.⁴ Where the regulation of streets is delegated to the legislative and the governmental body of a municipality by name, as to the city council, such body is not in this regard the representative of the state as distinguished from the municipality.⁵ When the power is thus delegated, it is held in trust to be exercised as the circumstances may require, and cannot be relinquished without legislative authority.⁶ The manner of exercising the power, if prescribed by statute, must be followed.⁷

b. OWNERSHIP OF FEE. — As a general rule, the public has only an easement in the streets, the fee remaining in the landowner, subject merely to the right of the public to the use of the street for street purposes.⁸ In many instances, however, statutes have provided that in the condemnation or dedication of lands for streets the fee shall vest in the municipality; and the fee may, of course, be so vested by conveyances to municipalities of land for streets.⁹

Where the fee is retained by the landowner, the easement or right to the use and control of the street is regarded as a legal and not a mere equitable right.¹

Municipality Holds Title in Trust. — Whether the fee of the street or a mere easement is vested in the municipality, it holds it in trust for the public for the ordinary and necessary purposes to which the streets of a city are usually subjected.²

Where the Fee Is Retained by the Landowner It Passes, as a rule, with the conveyance of the abutting land, and is in the owner for the time being of the abutting land;³ but this is not necessarily so, as the owner of the abutting land and of the fee in the street may convey the abutting land without conveying the fee in the street.⁴

c. TREES. — Where the fee of the street is vested in the abutting lot owners, shade trees upon the margin of sidewalks are the property of such owners;⁵ but it is otherwise where the fee of the street is in the municipality,⁶ and this would seem to be true though the trees were planted by the abutting lot owners with the permission of the municipal authorities.⁷ Where the municipality is the owner of the shade trees upon the margin of sidewalks, it may, under the general power to control its streets, prohibit injury to such trees by individuals,⁸ and such a general prohibition applies fully to the owner of the abutting land,⁹ except, of course, where the abutting lot owner, through his ownership of the fee of the street, is the owner of the trees, as in such a case he may remove them at pleasure.¹⁰

Removal of Trees. — Under the general power to control and regulate streets, the municipality may remove shade trees planted upon sidewalks which obstruct the use of the walk, even though the abutting lot owner is the owner of the trees.¹¹ Where a tree stands on the line of the street, partly on the street and partly on the land of the abutting owner, the municipality may remove the entire tree, if the removal of that part within the street is reasonably necessary and the portion left standing would be dangerous to travel.¹²

Discretion of Municipality. — It has been held that in the absence of fraud or oppression, or circumstances disclosing a manifest abuse of discretion, the decision of the municipality that trees constitute an obstruction to the free use of the sidewalk is not open to question by the courts.¹ In a number of instances, however, the courts have prohibited the arbitrary action of municipalities in removing shade trees as obstructions to travel,² and statutes have sometimes been expressly enacted restricting the right of municipalities to remove shade trees standing in the streets.³

Action by Property Owner for Injuries to Trees. — It has been held that though the abutting lot owner is not the owner of the fee in the street, he may still recover damages as against a third party who wrongfully injures shade trees in front of his property.⁴

Duty to Care for Trees. — Where a municipal corporation under its charter powers plants or maintains shade trees on a sidewalk, the owner or occupant of the adjoining premises is not charged in the absence of statute with the duty of properly trimming such trees; but when the fee of the street and the ownership of the trees are in him, it is his duty to prevent the trees from becoming dangerous to travelers, and for an injury resulting from a neglect of this duty he is liable.⁵

d. REMOVAL OF SOIL. — By Property Owner. — An abutting property owner has no right to remove, for his own use, the soil from the street, though he is the owner of the fee.⁶

By Municipality. — Where, in the improvement of streets by a municipality, it becomes necessary to remove the soil of the street, the municipality may use the soil so removed as against the abutting property owner in the improvement of the streets in other places.⁷ The municipality has, however, no right to remove the soil from the street if such removal is not necessary for the proper improvement thereof.⁸

e. TO WHAT USES MUNICIPALITY MAY PUT STREETS. — The municipalities hold the streets, and power to regulate and control them, in trust for the public, and cannot put them to any use inconsistent with street purposes.⁹

A city, to secure the construction of a sewer in a street, entered into a contract with a person that he should take out the stone the whole width of the street and several feet in depth below the grade, construct the sewer, and refill the street to the original grade. As compensation he was to have the stone so removed. It was held that, as to so much of the stone as it was reasonably necessary to remove for the construction of the sewer, the owner of the soil had no cause of action against the city, but otherwise as to the residue. *Viliski v. But they may, as a general rule, do anything with a street which is not inconsistent with the ends for which streets are established.¹ Thus, cities have no right to use their streets for the erection of municipal buildings or works,² and it has been held that placing a standpipe in a public street, the fee of which was in the municipality, was an unlawful use of the street.³ The right of the municipality to authorize the erection of monuments in streets with the consent of the owner of the fee has been upheld.⁴

attempt is made to render the grant exclusive does not render it void in toto.¹ An exclusive grant may be authorized by the legislature.²

Compensation to Abutting Owners. — Any proper exercise of governmental power over a street in a municipality for purposes which do not directly encroach upon the abutting property of an individual, though the consequence may be to impair its use, will not entitle the adjoining proprietor to compensation,³ for he has been compensated at the time of the dedication or appropriation of the land for a street for injuries resulting from its use as such, or for purposes properly incidental to such use; and such incidental uses do not constitute an additional servitude.⁴ But when an additional servitude is imposed, the abutting property owner is entitled to compensation.⁵ Thus, abutting owners are entitled to compensation where streets are authorized to be used by ordinary commercial railroads,⁶ or for the erection of a permanent railroad station in the street.⁷

(2) Exercise of Power. — Where the statute conferring upon the municipality the power to grant street privileges or franchises specifies the manner in which the power shall be exercised, such requirement must be followed in the exercise of the power.⁸ Thus, when required by statute, the privilege or franchise must be sold,⁹ and when the charter prescribes that franchises can be granted by ordinance, it is not competent to make such a grant by resolution;¹⁰ but in the absence of such a charter or statutory restriction, the power may be exercised by resolution.¹¹

chises is conferred upon the municipality, the exercise of this power is discretionary with the municipality, and its action is not, as a rule, subject to control by the courts.¹

Imposing Conditions. — Where the power to grant is discretionary, the municipality is not restricted to granting or refusing to grant privileges or franchises, but in granting them may impose such conditions and restrictions as it may deem expedient for the good of the public.² In a few cases, however, the right to impose unreasonable conditions or restrictions has been denied.³

The Power Cannot Be Delegated, but must be exercised by the municipality through the officers specified by the statutes.⁴

(3) Construction and Extent of Privilege or Franchise. — It is a well-settled rule of construction that where special street privileges or franchises are granted which interfere with the authority of the municipality to control its streets, and with the free use thereof by the public, the grant must be construed strictly in favor of the public and against the grantee.⁵

Exclusiveness of Privilege or Franchise. — The grant will not be construed as conferring an exclusive privilege in the absence of language expressly so providing.⁶

(4) Termination of Privilege. — The right to exercise the privilege or franchise terminates upon the expiration of the time for which the grant is made.⁷

Revocation. — Grants by a municipality under legislative authority of special street privileges or franchises have been recognized as grants of vested rights of which the grantee cannot, as a rule, be deprived at the will of the municipality,⁸ though the municipality has the right to impose reasonable regulations upon the exercise of the franchise.¹ A mere license from a municipality, however, to maintain in a street an obstruction which otherwise would be illegal has been recognized as revocable at the will of the municipality.²

Forfeiture.—Where the grant is made upon certain conditions, the failure of the grantee to perform such conditions will operate as a forfeiture of the privilege or franchise.³ But the municipality may waive such a forfeiture,⁴ and where there is a condition subsequent, and the privilege becomes vested, the forfeiture cannot be enforced by an ordinance attempting to revoke the grant, but only by a judicial proceeding.⁵

Privilege of Constructing Vault under Sidewalk.—Under legislative authority, a city granted a permit to a person to make a vault under an alley, and took from such person a bond in which the city reserved the right to revoke the permit whenever the public interest should require. It was held that unless the public interest in fact required the abandonment of the vault, the city could not revoke the permit, as the permit constituted a contract not revocable at mere will. *Gregsten v. "Building."—It has been held that the term "building," as used in a municipal ordinance requiring the removal of snow by the tenant or owner of any "building," includes a tenement, so that where a building consists of two tenements, one of which is occupied by a tenant and the other is vacant, it is the owner's requirement, no duty to remove snow and ice therefrom is imposed upon such owners.¹

2. Obstruction of Streets—a. IN GENERAL.—The primary purpose of streets is for the free passage of the public, and individuals have no authority to obstruct such use,² nor can the right to obstruct streets be acquired by prescription,³ or by permission from the municipality given without legislative authority.⁴ But from the necessity of the case persons may be justified in making particular uses of streets which to a limited extent operate as an obstruction of free passage.⁵ The power to prevent the obstruction of streets is, as a rule, expressly conferred upon municipalities.⁶

b. PARTICULAR OBSTRUCTIONS—(1) Deposit of Building Materials.—Owners of abutting lots have a right to the use of a reasonable or necessary part of the street on which to deposit building materials while erecting buildings,⁷ and the same has been held with regard to the temporary deposit of earth excavated from building sites.⁸ This right of deposit arises of necessity, otherwise the construction of buildings in cities would be impossible.⁹ But the abutting owner can make only a reasonable use of the street for such purposes,¹⁰ and the municipality has a right to prescribe terms and conditions for the deposit of building materials which are reasonably proper to secure the safety of persons passing along the street.¹¹

(2) Removal of Merchandise or Other Property from and to Buildings.—Abutting property owners are entitled to make a reasonable use of the street for the purpose of moving property or merchandise to and from their buildduty to remove the snow and ice from the sidewalk. Easthampton v. Hill, 162 Mass. 302.

"Flagged" Sidewalk.—Under a city ordinance requiring the removal of snow and ice from sidewalks, but excepting walks which have not been curbed, guttered, and flagged, the sidewalk is to be deemed sufficiently flagged to impose upon the abutting owner the duty to remove the snow and ice, where a line of flagstones four feet in width has been laid in the centre of the walk, although the entire width of the walk has not been covered thereby. New York v. Brown, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 218.

Liability to Pedestrians.—The failure of an abutting property owner to remove snow and ice from the sidewalk as required by a city ordinance does not impose any liability upon him for injuries to pedestrians. Flynn v. Canton Co., 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603. See also Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disney (Ohio) 532.

The owner of a building, part of which he has let to one tenant and the rest to another, is not liable for neglect to remove snow from the adjoining sidewalk under a city ordinance which provides that it shall be removed by the "tenant, occupant, and, in case there shall be no tenant, the owner," although the owner occupies rooms in the building as a boarder with one of his tenants. *Com. v. ings, though such use may temporarily obstruct the free use of the street by the public, as in the case of the removal of merchandise by tradesmen to and from their stores.¹ Thus, the right of a merchant to place skids temporarily across a sidewalk to remove merchandise from a store has been upheld.² But the use for this as for other purposes must be reasonable and must be subordinate to the general rights of the public.³ Thus, it has been held unreasonable to appropriate half of a much traveled street for alternate hours each day for loading and unloading goods from wagons,⁴ or to obstruct the sidewalk by placing skids across it for four or five hours each day.⁵ Whether the use in the particular case is reasonable must be determined from the surrounding facts and circumstances.⁶

(3) Deposit or Display of Merchandise, etc., on Sidewalks.—Abutting property owners have no right to use any portion of the sidewalk for the deposit and display of merchandise or other articles kept for sale,⁷ nor have they the right to place upon the sidewalks showboards, placards, or other articles.⁸ It has been held that the municipality cannot, without legislative authority, grant the privilege of using sidewalks for such purposes,⁹ and a license from the municipality permitting the use of a certain portion of the sidewalk for the display of merchandise is revocable.¹⁰

(4) Booths and Stands on Sidewalks.—Neither abutting owners nor other persons have any right to obstruct sidewalks by booths or stands for the sale of fruit, papers, etc.,¹¹ nor has the municipality any implied power to authorize the erection upon sidewalks of such booths or stands.¹² But the power to authorize the erection of such structures may be expressly granted to the municipality by the legislature.¹

(5) Projections from Buildings — Bay Windows, Awnings, etc. — Abutting property owners have no general right to encroach upon the street with any part of buildings erected by them,² nor can the municipality under its general power to regulate and control streets authorize such encroachments.³ Thus, ornamental columns,⁴ cornices,⁵ porches and platforms,⁶ bay or oriel windows,⁷ awnings,⁸ signs,⁹ and steps or stairways, projecting beyond the street line,¹⁰ have been held to constitute illegal encroachments upon the street. Overhead passages or archways connecting buildings on the opposite sides of the street have likewise been held to be illegal encroachments.¹¹ The legislature, under its paramount control of streets, may authorize directly, or empower the municipality to authorize, encroachments by abutting lot owners upon sidewalks,¹² such as bay windows,¹³ awnings,¹⁴ steps or stairways,¹⁵ etc.

to their cellars, irrespective of the question whether such ways are open or protected by coverings,¹ nor have they the right to excavate and construct vaults or cellars under the sidewalk;² and municipalities cannot grant the right to maintain openings in sidewalks.³ But in a number of cases where the fee in the street is vested in the abutting property owners, the right to excavate and construct vaults and cellars under the sidewalk, provided they do not interfere with free traffic upon the sidewalk, has been upheld.⁴ The legislature may expressly grant such rights to abutting owners, or authorize municipalities to do so,⁵ and when this is done the municipalities may, for the protection of the public, regulate the manner of their use and the precautions to be taken to prevent injury to the public.⁶

(7) Excavations in Streets.—Property owners have no general right to make openings in the street surface, so as to obstruct the free passage of the street,⁷ but the right to make reasonable excavations extending into the sidewalk in the course of the construction of buildings has been upheld.⁸

Incidental to Privilege Granted.—Persons to whom street privileges or franchises have been lawfully granted impliedly acquire the right to open the surface of the street when necessary to the enjoyment of their special privileges or franchises.⁹

street is in dispute the right of the municipality summarily to remove alleged obstructions thereon has been denied,¹ and where municipalities attempt to proceed summarily, and the land upon which the obstruction is located is claimed by an individual in whose possession it is, injunctions have been granted pending the determination as to the existence of the street.² It has been held that where the obstruction was erected under permission from the municipality, its summary removal is unwarranted unless it clearly appears that the permission was exceeded.³

Exercise of Power. — Statutory requirements with regard to the exercise of the power to remove summarily street obstructions must, of course, be complied with.⁴ Thus, the power can be exercised only by the designated officer,⁵ and provisions with regard to notice to the persons creating the obstruction must be regarded.⁶ In summarily removing alleged obstructions, municipalities act at their peril, and in case the removal was unauthorized are liable in damages to the person injured.⁷

(a) Criminal Prosecution. — The obstruction of streets is a public nuisance and is indictable as such,⁸ and in a number of jurisdictions is expressly prohibited, under penalty, by statute.⁹

Ordinances Imposing Penalties. — Municipalities having general power to prevent the obstruction of streets may enact ordinances against such obstruction, imposing penalties for their violation,¹⁰ and power to pass such ordinances is often expressly conferred.¹¹

In Grand Rapids v. Hughes, 15 Mich. 54, a charter provision empowering the common council to prevent and remove all encroachments upon the streets was held not to authorize it to impose penalties for such encroachments, where the charter specifically enumerated various powers, not including this, which the council might render effectual by penal prosecutions.

A municipality empowered merely to "abate" nuisances has no power to impose a fine for the obstruction of streets, such obstruction having been declared a nuisance by statute. Nevada v. Hutchins, 59 Iowa 506.

The Fact that the Injury Differs in Degree Merely, without difference in kind, is insufficient to entitle the individual to maintain an action the owner of premises abutting on a street, as owner of the fee subject to the public easement, for special injury caused by the permanent obstruction by a third person of the surface of the street adjacent to the property.¹

(a) Abatement. — Individuals may abate obstructions in streets in accordance with the general principles applicable to the abatement of nuisances.²

3. Regulation of Uses of Streets — a. IN GENERAL. — The legislature has power to regulate or may delegate to municipalities the regulation of general street traffic. Thus, requirements that vehicles shall carry lights at night,³ and prohibitions against placing or carrying on sidewalks any showboard, placard, or sign for display,⁴ against the distribution of handbills which the recipients would naturally throw into the street,⁵ against the obstruction of streets by persons idly standing or congregating thereon,⁶ and against smoking in streets,⁷ have been sustained. But it has been held that under a general power to prevent nuisances a municipality cannot prohibit the showing or exhibition of stud horses on the streets of a town.⁸ So the legislature cannot empower a municipality to exclude all "business avocations" from property abutting on boulevards.⁹

b. MOVING BUILDINGS ON STREETS. — The right of an individual to use streets for moving buildings through them, proper expedition being employed so as to cause no unnecessary obstruction, has been recognized;¹⁰ but a third person injured by the failure to use due diligence, for instance a street-railway company whose tracks are obstructed, is entitled to recover damages.¹¹ And where the building is abandoned in the street so as to obstruct travel, the municipality may recover the cost of removing it.¹² Under their general power of control over streets, municipalities may adopt reasonable regulations regarding the moving of buildings thereon, such as regulations requiring a permit from particular officers,¹³ and may, it seems, absolutely prohibit the McCafferty*, 145 Mass. 384, wherein an ordinance providing that "no person shall place or carry or cause to be placed or carried on any sidewalk any showboard, placard, or sign for the purpose of there displaying the same," was sustained as reasonable, and it was held that such ordinance was violated where the defendant walked upon the sidewalk, having over his shoulders a piece of oilcloth, which he wore like a vest or coat, on which was printed the inscription: "Lasters on strike. All lasters are requested to keep away from P. P. Sherry until the present trouble is settled. Per order L. P. U."

5. Wettengel v. Denver, 20 Colo. 552.

In Michigan it has been held that a municipality empowered to clean its streets and prevent the obstruction thereof could not absolutely

App. 60, an ordinance prohibiting "public meetings" on streets was held to apply only to meetings held pursuant to some notice intended and adopted to reach the general public, and was not violated by members of the "Salvation Army" who, without previous arrangement or notice, stopped on the street and proceeded to sing, pray, and testify, thereby collecting a crowd.

moving of buildings through the streets.¹

c. PARADES AND PROCESSIONS. — The rights of individuals to make a reasonable use of streets for parades or processions has frequently been upheld.² But an unreasonable use of the streets for such purposes, so as materially to obstruct travel, is not warranted.³ Reasonable regulations with regard to the use of streets for parades and processions may be imposed by the municipality,⁴ such as requirements that a permit be obtained from particular municipal officers.⁵ But it seems that the use of streets for such purposes cannot be absolutely prohibited without regard to circumstances.⁶

d. NOISES ON STREETS. — Municipalities may be empowered to impose reasonable regulations with regard to the making of noises on streets,⁷ such as the beating of drums⁸ or the delivery of orations or harangues.⁹ Ordinances prohibiting the making of such noises without a permit being first acquired from particular municipal officers have been sustained as valid.¹⁰

e. RESTRICTIONS AS TO VEHICLES AND LOADS. — The power reasonably to regulate the use of streets by vehicles of unusually large size, or by those whose mode of use would greatly embarrass or endanger public travel, has been upheld, and regulations prescribing certain streets for such vehicles and prohibiting their presence in other streets have been held to be reasonable.¹¹

Driving Cattle Through Streets. — In New Jersey it has been held that a municipality empowered to "regulate and control" the driving of cattle through streets was not empowered to prohibit such driving.¹²

Restriction as to Weight of Loads. — Under the general power to regulate the use of streets, municipalities may impose reasonable restrictions as to the weight of loads to be hauled.¹³ Thus, an ordinance prohibiting persons hauling greater loads than three thousand five hundred pounds upon wagons whose tires are less than three inches wide,¹ and an ordinance prohibiting the carrying on any vehicle of a load the weight whereof exceeds three tons, unless such load consists of an article which cannot be divided,² have been upheld.

f. REGULATIONS AS TO SPEED.—Municipalities have power to impose reasonable regulations upon the speed of vehicles,³ and ordinances restricting speed have been held to be applicable to fire engines and wagons responding to fire alarms,⁴ and also to ambulances.⁵ In a prosecution under an ordinance prohibiting fast driving, the fact that no one was endangered by such driving is immaterial, and evidence of the defendant's reputation as a careful driver is inadmissible.⁶ The motive under which a defendant acted in driving at a speed violative of a municipal ordinance does not affect the question of his guilt, though such motive, it has been held, should be considered with a view to inflicting an appropriate penalty.⁷

g. BICYCLES.—The use of streets and sidewalks by bicycles has been treated in another place.⁸

h. RIDING OR DRIVING ON SIDEWALKS.—The primary object of sidewalks is for the accommodation of pedestrians, and riding or driving thereon may be prohibited.⁹ On the other hand, the municipality may authorize the use of sidewalks by teams, as in a case where the street proper is so obstructed by street-car tracks as to prevent the standing of a team on the street without obstructing the tracks.¹⁰ It has been held not to be necessarily illegal to back a wagon across a sidewalk for the purpose of unloading merchandise through the window of a building.¹¹ General prohibitions against

An ordinance imposing a fine upon any person who shall wilfully, etc., ride or drive animals on the streets "faster than an ordinary trot" is not unreasonable, and the description of the gait is not vague or uncertain. Nealis v. Hayward, 48 Ind. 19.

In Massachusetts it has been held that a city empowered by ordinance to prohibit persons from riding or driving upon any street "at a rate of speed which it deems inconsistent with the public safety" could not prohibit the riding or driving "at an immoderate gait so as to endanger or expose to injury any person standing, walking, or riding in or on the same." The court, while recognizing that the ordinance could prohibit driving or riding at a particular gait, as at a trot or gallop, as in Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 462, said that it did not authorize the imposition of a penalty for driving at a rate of speed or at a gait which should be found upon inquiry into the circumstances to have been immoderate so as to expose persons to injury, the intention of the legislature being that the city should determine what specific act should be unlawful. Com. v. Roy, 140 Mass. 432.

Persons Driving Animals Along a Street may be prohibited from allowing them to go upon sidewalks.³

i. STANDING WAGONS ON STREETS.—The length of time during which vehicles shall be allowed to stand upon streets may be prescribed or regulated,⁴ and municipalities may prohibit the stopping of vehicles upon crosswalks,⁵ the leaving of teams unfastened or unattended in the street,⁶ or the leaving in the streets of vehicles not in use.⁷ A prohibition against stopping with a vehicle longer than a specified time has been held to refer to a voluntary and not to an involuntary stoppage,⁸ but to apply to licensed peddlers.⁹ At common law stopping a wagon upon a street is not illegal unless it unreasonably obstructs the travel upon the street.¹⁰

j. HACK STANDS.—Municipalities have no implied power to authorize the exclusive use by an individual of a part of a street for a hack stand¹¹ nor to permit a use for such purpose which will unreasonably obstruct street travel.¹² The power to establish stands for hacks in streets in front of public buildings¹³ or quasi-public buildings, such as depots,¹⁴ has been upheld, but it is otherwise as to streets in front of private property in the absence of consent of the owner.¹⁵ The power to prohibit the standing of hacks except at designated places has been upheld.¹⁶ Hackmen have, however, the right to make a reasonable use of the streets for taking up and letting down their passengers.¹⁷

VII. CARE AND REPAIR OF STREETS — 1. In General. — The duty to keep streets in repair is imposed as a general rule upon the municipalities,¹ and in order to perform this duty they may do whatever is necessary to make the streets safe and convenient for travel. Thus, the municipality may, when necessary to render the street safe for travel, erect a barrier across an open passageway below the level of the street.² In some instances statutes have imposed upon abutting owners the duty to keep the streets in repair, and have authorized the municipality, where the abutting owner refuses to perform such duty, to make the necessary repairs and collect the reasonable cost thereof from such owner.³

2. Work on Street by Inhabitants. — The subject of requiring inhabitants to work upon the street of the municipality will be found treated elsewhere in this volume.⁴

3. Injuries from Defective Streets and Sidewalks. — The liability of municipalities for injuries to travelers from defects in streets and sidewalks is treated under another title.⁵

VIII. ACTIONS FOR INJURIES TO STREETS. — Municipalities upon which the duty of maintaining the streets in repair is imposed may sue to recover damages for injuries thereto by individuals.⁶

IX. RAILROADS IN STREETS — 1. Scope of Section. — This section is designed to treat of the longitudinal occupation of streets in cities and towns by ordinary steam railroads used for the carriage of both goods and passengers, and by private railroads operated by steam. The law in regard to the use of rural highways by railroads,⁷ the occupation of streets and highways by street railroads,⁸ and the crossing of streets and highways by railroads, is fully treated elsewhere in this volume.⁹

grant is not conferred by a general clause in the charter giving the city control over its streets,¹ or by a clause empowering it to grant the use of its streets to street railways.²

Nature of Power. — In granting the right to use its streets in the manner here considered, a city acts as agent of the state.³ The power of the municipal authorities is legislative in its nature, and is not referable for its support to the power of making contracts.⁴

Limitations upon Power. — Power conferred upon a city to permit the use of its streets by railroads must be construed as subject to the qualification that no property rights of abutting owners shall be invaded thereby.⁵ It is sometimes provided by statute that the city shall grant authority only upon the petition of adjacent property owners,⁶ or after notice to persons interested.⁷ General grants of authority without limitations as to the location of the road in the street⁸ or the duration of the privilege,⁹ and grants which derogate from the power of the city to legislate upon the subject in the future, are generally held to be void.¹⁰

Manner of Giving Consent. — The manner in which the consent of a municipality is to be given, whether by resolution of the city council or other legislative body, or by permit from the city officers, will depend upon the municipal charter or other statute by which the power to give consent is conferred.¹¹

Authority to permit the connection by common depots, tracks, or otherwise of all railroads in the city, does not include power to authorize the longitudinal occupation of a street by a steam railroad. Augusta, etc., R. Co. v. Augusta, 100 Ga. 701.

Statutes providing for the sale of franchises for the operation of street railroads to the highest bidder do not apply to applications by steam railroads for permission to occupy the public streets.¹

Delegation of Power. — As a general rule power to authorize the use of its streets for this purpose cannot be delegated by the city to an administrative board or other subordinate body.²

c. AUTHORIZED USE NOT A NUISANCE OR TRESPASS. — When authorized by the legislature, or by a city having power to grant such authority, a railroad may use the public streets, and where the road is properly constructed and operated such use does not constitute a nuisance or a trespass as against abutting owners.³

d. WHAT CONSTITUTES GRANT OF AUTHORITY. — While the legislature, or a city to which power has been delegated by the legislature, may authorize the use of public streets by railroads, the intention to grant such authority must appear in the statute or ordinance by express words or necessary implication, and will not be implied from doubtful language.⁴ Thus, authority to occupy a street longitudinally will not be implied from charter provisions authorizing the construction of the road between certain designated termini,⁵ or between certain cities,⁶ or to and into a city,⁷ or upon or across any highway intersected;⁸ nor does a statute authorizing a railroad company to erect a depot in a certain city authorize it to lay its tracks and run its engines over the streets of that city.⁹

e. HOW AND BY WHOM RIGHT MAY BE QUESTIONED. — Ordinarily the right of a railroad to occupy a public street must be determined in a direct proceeding, and cannot be questioned collaterally.¹⁰ Nor can the validity of an ordinance permitting such use be questioned by a private individual who has suffered no special or peculiar injury therefrom.¹

f. POWER OF CITY TO IMPOSE CONDITIONS AND REGULATE USE.—In giving its consent to the construction of a railroad upon its streets, a city may impose such reasonable conditions as it sees fit.² So where a railroad occupies a city street by direct authority of the legislature, its use thereof is subject to reasonable regulations imposed by the municipal authorities.³ And in the absence of fraud or oppression, the discretion of the city in imposing such conditions and restrictions will not be interfered with by the courts.⁴ Thus, reasonable stipulations as to the location of the track,⁵ the manner of constructing the road,⁶ and the time within which it must be constructed, will be upheld.⁷ A stipulation that other railroad companies shall be permitted to use the track is valid.⁸ And the same is true of reasonable conditions prohibiting the use of the track during certain hours,⁹ or forbidding the carriage of freight through the streets without permission of the municipal authorities,¹⁰ or providing that the company shall not use its road as a street railroad in competition with other companies operating street railroads in the city.¹¹ Conditions thus imposed, if accepted by the railroad company, are binding upon it,¹² and upon its successors.¹³ For breach thereof the ordinance granting authority may be repealed,¹ and the city may re-enter and take possession of the street and remove the track,² or may sue for damages³ or specific performance.⁴

g. NATURE AND EXTENT OF RIGHTS ACQUIRED — (1) Construction of Statutes and Ordinances Granting Right. — Statutes and ordinances authorizing the occupation of public streets by steam railroads are to be construed strictly against the grantees and in favor of the public.⁵ Thus, an ordinance authorizing the construction of a single track does not warrant the building of a double track.⁶

(2) Easement or Fee. — Whether the railroad takes the fee in the part of the street occupied by it, or only an easement, will depend upon the terms of the grant.⁷

(3) Width of Right of Way. — In Pennsylvania it has been held that the presumption arising under the General Railroad Laws that a railroad company takes, when it enters by virtue of the right of eminent domain, the full breadth of sixty feet for its right of way, is only applicable where the entry is adverse, and on property subject to seizure or appropriation under general laws; and that it does not apply to an entry on a public street, whether made under the authority of the act of assembly incorporating the company, or by virtue of municipal consent.⁸

(4) Exclusive Use. — In the absence of express statutory authority a railroad has no right to occupy or use the whole width of the street to the exclusion of the public⁹ or of other railroad companies.¹⁰ Nor has a city, in the absence of such authority, any power to grant to a railroad company such exclusive use of the street as will destroy its usefulness as a public thoroughfare.¹ Accordingly, in the absence of express words, or their equivalent, giving an exclusive right to the street or a defined part of it, the grant, whether legislative or municipal, will be construed most strongly against the grantee and most favorably in aid of the previously existing public right of passage.²

4. REVOCATION OF LICENSE.—Where a city has granted permission to a railroad company to use its streets the authority cannot be revoked without cause³ or without notice to the company.⁴ Nor can the city virtually repeal its license by the enactment of subsequent ordinances imposing conditions which render the operation of the road impossible.⁵ If the ordinance granting authority reserves the right of amendment, the railroad company may be required to submit to such amendments as are reasonable.⁶ But the ordinance cannot be repealed or amended in such manner as to interfere with vested rights.⁷ As a general rule a forfeiture of the company's right to use the street can be enforced only by the state or city.⁸

9. Where a Street Is Obstructed by reason of the improper location or construction of a railroad the city may compel the railroad company to change the location of its tracks or the tracks in question are being used improperly, where the company's right to use the street for proper purposes is not questioned.¹

i. ACQUIREMENT OF RIGHT BY PRESCRIPTION. — A grant of the right to maintain a railroad in a public street may be presumed from long-continued exercise of such right under such circumstances as would give rise to a title by prescription in other cases;² especially where the city has indirectly recognized the existence of such right by the enactment of ordinances regulating the use of the street by the railroad.³ But in such cases the railroad will be confined to the character of the use enjoyed during the prescriptive period, and will not be permitted to change the nature or extent of such use to the prejudice of abutting owners or the public.⁴

j. TRANSFER OF RIGHT. — In the absence of stipulations to the contrary a grant of the right to use a street for railroad purposes enures to the benefit of a company which has succeeded to all the rights, property, and franchises of the original grantee.⁵

k. UNAUTHORIZED USE. — The unauthorized use of a public street by a railroad is a public nuisance,⁶ which may be enjoined by any person specially injured thereby.⁷ Such use also constitutes an injury to abutting or adjacent owners which entitles them to sue for damages⁸ or to bring an action of to remove them entirely. Mason v. Ohio River R. Co., 51 W. Va. 183. And see Snyder v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 55 Pa. St. 340.

Order to Tear Up Tracks Held Void. — In Sinnot v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 81 Wis. 95, it was held that the board of public works of a city had no power to make an order requiring a railroad company, on twenty-five days' notice, to tear up part of its tracks, where compliance with such order would prevent the company from running its trains to its general depot, and continuously over its lines of road beyond such depot, as it had been doing, without objection or interruption, for eighteen years.

Where a railroad company has lawfully built its road upon private land outside the city limits, the subsequent annexation of such land to the city, and its acceptance as a public street, do not render the occupation and possession of such street by the railroad a public nuisance subject to be abated by mere resolution of the city council. *Denver v. ejectionment.¹ But the unauthorized use may be legalized by a subsequent grant of authority from the city or legislature.²

7. PRIVATE RAILROADS. — Railroads designed for purely private uses cannot be constructed or operated upon public streets, nor has a city any power to grant the use of its streets for such a purpose.³ But there may be a grant to private individuals or corporations of the right to lay branch tracks or switches in the streets, connecting with public railroad tracks previously laid, and extending to the manufacturing or business establishments of those laying them. In such cases the tracks so laid become, in legal contemplation, tracks of the railway with which they are connected, and are open to the public use and control.⁴

3. Construction and Operation of Road — a. IN GENERAL. — Where a railroad is located upon a public street it must be constructed and operated in such manner as to cause the least possible interference with the rights of the public and of abutting owners.⁵ The obstruction of a street by the improper construction or operation of a railroad constitutes a public nuisance.⁶

A City May Enjoin a Railroad Company from Obstructing Its Streets in violation of the terms of the contract under which the company uses such streets. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Quincy, 136 Ill. 489.

When Abutting Owner May Enjoin. — Where a railroad is improperly constructed upon a public street in such manner as to inflict special injury upon an abutting owner, it constitutes both a public and a private nuisance which may be enjoined; and the fact that the complainant has

b. LOCATION OF TRACKS. — If the right to occupy the street is derived from a grant by the city, the provisions of the grant as to the location of the tracks must be complied with.¹ But where the street is occupied by direct authority of the legislature, a municipal ordinance requiring the track to be laid in the centre of the street does not render its construction in another part of the street illegal.²

c. CONFORMITY TO GRADE OF STREET — CUTS AND EMBANKMENTS. — As a general rule the railroad must be built in conformity to the established grade of the street;³ but it may be built in a cut or upon an embankment or other elevation where such mode of construction is authorized by statute.⁴

d. WHAT APPURTENANCES MAY BE LOCATED IN STREET. — Permission to a railroad company to construct and maintain its road upon a street carries with it authority to construct necessary turnouts⁵ and switch tracks therein;⁶ but it does not authorize the obstruction of the street by the erection thereon received freight from the track complained of does not affect his right to sue. Knapp v. St. Louis Transfer R. Co., 126 Mo. 26.

Right to Use Sidewalk. — In Knapp v. St. Louis Transfer R. Co., 126 Mo. 26, it was held that an ordinance authorizing the construction of the railroad along the western portion of a named street did not restrict the company to the roadway as distinguished from the side-walk.

Elevation of Railroad. — Where a city ordi-nance, confirmed by a subsequent amendment of the charter of the railroad company, author-izes an elevation of the road in passing through a city, portions of such road may be elevated even though the elevation was not authorized by the original charter of the company. Fulton v. Short Route R. Transfer Co., 85 Ky. 640, 7 Am. St. Rep. 619.

of repair shops,¹ water tanks,² depots, or freight houses.³

e. RIGHT TO LAY ADDITIONAL TRACKS.—Whether or not a railroad which has been authorized to occupy a street and has constructed one or more tracks thereon may subsequently lay additional tracks, without a new grant of authority, will depend upon the terms of the original grant.⁴

f. RIGHT TO ALTER GAUGE OF TRACKS.—Where an ordinance authorizing a railroad company to build its road upon a public street does not limit the width of the track, a subsequent change of gauge will not be enjoined at the suit of an abutting owner,⁵ especially where the width of the roadbed and the length of the ties will not be increased by the alteration.⁶ But where the company is limited by its charter to the construction of a narrow-gauge road, it cannot alter the gauge of its tracks upon a city street without the consent of the city.⁷

g. RESTORATION AND REPAIR OF STREET.—Railroad companies are generally required by statute or ordinance to restore streets occupied by their roads to their former state or to such state as not unnecessarily to impair their usefulness;⁸ and after restoration the street must be kept in a reasonable state of repair.⁹

h. OPERATION.—Authority to build a railroad upon a public street includes authority to operate it in a proper manner after it is constructed.¹⁰ The company may run trains in the night as well as the daytime, and may run heavy freight trains, ring bells, and sound whistles;¹¹ but it cannot use the street for the purpose of storing cars, or shifting, switching, or making up trains, or unloading or loading freight.¹²

4. Rights and Remedies of Property Owners — a. RIGHT OF ABUTTING OWNERS TO COMPENSATION OR DAMAGES — (1) Rule Where Abutter Owns Fee in Street. — The construction of an ordinary commercial steam railroad upon a public street is generally regarded as the imposition of an additional servitude,¹ which entitles an abutter who owns the fee in the street to compensation.²

(2) Rule Where Fee Is in City or Public. — In some jurisdictions the right to compensation is extended to abutters who do not own the fee;³ but in many states it is held that where the fee is in the city or the public, the occupation of the street by a railroad does not amount to a taking of land within the constitutional guaranty of compensation,⁴ unless the abutting owner is thereby deprived of the reasonable use of the street.¹

(3) Ownership of Fee Immaterial. — In other jurisdictions still, the ownership of the fee is regarded as immaterial, the abutter's right to compensation depending upon the manner in which the road is constructed and used. If he is deprived of the reasonable use of the street he will be entitled to compensation even though the fee is in the public;² otherwise he cannot recover compensation even though he owns the fee.³

(4) Consequential and Special Injuries. — Where, under the constitution and laws of a state, compensation is limited to "property taken" and does not cover "property damaged," and the fee of the street is not in the adjacent lot-owner, the mere use of the street by a railroad company, when authorized by law, for the laying down of a track and the running of trains, gives no cause of action to the lot-owner, although consequential injuries may result to him therefrom. The interference with the free use of the street he suffers in common with all pro bono publico, although he may suffer more than others.⁴

(7) City Not Liable for Compensation or Damages. — The owner's right to compensation or damages is against the railroad company and not against the city.⁴

b. RIGHTS OF OWNERS OF PROPERTY NOT ABUTTING. — As a general rule an owner whose property does not abut upon that portion of the street which is taken for a railroad has no right to damages,⁵ or to relief by injunction.⁶ Nor does the construction of the railroad upon one side of a street entitle an owner of property on the opposite side to damages.⁷ But owners of property upon a street which crosses a railroad are entitled to damages for the construction thereupon of an approach to the railroad track.⁸

c. REMEDIES OF ABUTTING OWNERS — (1) Condemnation Proceedings. — An abutting owner whose property is not taken can neither institute condemnation proceedings nor compel the railroad company to do so. If he has suffered special injury from the use of the street by the railroad his remedy is by an action for damages.⁹

(2) Ejectment. — An abutter who owns the fee in the street may maintain an action of ejectment against a railroad company which has constructed its road therein without tender or payment of damages,¹ provided he has not estopped himself by acquiescence in such use of the street.²

(3) Injunction. — Where the abutting owner has title to the fee in the street,³ or where payment of compensation is, by statute, made a condition precedent, he may enjoin the construction of the road until compensation has been paid or tendered.⁴ According to some decisions, an abutter who does not own the fee in the street cannot enjoin the construction of a road therein, his only remedy being by an action for damages;⁵ but there are other decisions which hold that such an owner may have an injunction if specially injured.⁶ In the absence of special and peculiar injury an abutting owner cannot enjoin the construction of the railroad where the fee of the street is in the city or the public.⁷

Loss of Right by Acquiescence in Use of Street. — An abutter may lose his right to enjoin the operation of a railroad in the street by long-continued acquiescence in the use of the street for that purpose.⁸

General Nature of Action.—"In all cases in which a cause of action may exist, and in which it springs solely from the laying down of the track, and the subsequent running of trains in an ordinary, proper, and lawful manner, there is but a single cause of action; it involves, for the purpose of determining the compensation, the question of a diminution in value of the lot caused by the construction of the railroad; it arises at the time of the occupation of the street by the railroad company; and it is barred, like any other cause of action, after the lapse of the prescribed number of years from that date. A change in the ownership of the railroad property neither revives an old nor creates a new cause of action. 'Unlike actions for trespass to realty, where the plaintiff can only recover for the injury done up to the commencement of the suit, in suits of this kind a single recovery may be had for the whole damage to result from the act, the injury being continuing and permanent.'" of the property may recover damages for the injury.¹ So, where the vibration caused by passing trains is such as to injure buildings in the vicinity, the railroad company is liable.² But, by the weight of authority, an abutting owner cannot recover damages for the annoyance resulting from the noise caused by passing trains, at least where such noise is incidental to the ordinary and proper operation of the railroad.³

dd. OBSTRUCTION OF STREET. — Where a public street is obstructed by the improper construction or operation of a railroad therein, an abutting owner who suffers special injury may recover damages.⁴

ee. IMPROPER AND NEGLIGENT CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD. — Damages resulting from improper and negligent construction of the road are recoverable by an abutting owner who suffers special injury.⁵

ff. INJURIES INFLICTED DURING CONSTRUCTION. — A railroad company which builds its road in a public street is liable to an abutting owner for injuries inflicted upon his property while the road is being built as well as for the permanent injuries resulting from its construction.⁶

gg. INCREASE IN NUMBER OF TRACKS. — An increase in the number of tracks laid in the street may, in some cases, entitle an abutting owner to additional damages,⁷ but not where such increase was contemplated and provided for at the time of the original assessment.⁸

1. Smoke, Cinders, or Fire Cast upon Property — Owner Entitled to Damages. — South Carolina R. Co. v. Steiner, 44 Ga. 546; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Turner, 194 Ill. 575; Covington, etc., El. R. Transfer, etc., Co. v. Kleymeier, 105 Ky. 609; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Gross, (Ky. 1897) 43 S. W. Rep. 203; Henderson Belt R. Co. v. Dechamp, 95 Ky. 219; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ky. 109; Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Esterle, 13 Bush (Ky.) 667; Elizabethtown, etc., R. Co. v. Combs, 10 Bush (Ky.) 392, 19 Am. Rep. 67; Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Gardner, 45 Ohio St. 309; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Pfitzer, Ohio Prob. 248; Texarkana, etc., R. Co. v. Bulgier, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. Rep. 1047.

Contra — No Liability Where Road Is Properly Operated. — Where the railroad is authorized by law and properly operated, the company is not liable in damages to abutting owners for annoyance caused by smoke, cinders, etc. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kan. 552; Louisville Southern R. Co. v. Hooe, (Ky. 1896) 38 S. W. Rep. 131; Parrot v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 624; Werges v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 35 La. Ann. 641; Struthers v. Dunkirk, etc., R. Co., 87 Pa. St. 282; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Speer, 56 Pa. St. 325, 94 Am. Dec. 84.

2. Vibration Caused by Passing Trains. — South Carolina R. Co. v. Steiner, 44 Ga. 546; Louisville Southern R. Co. v. Hooe, (Ky. 1896) 38 S. W. Rep. 131; Parrot v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 331. But see In re Devlin, etc., R. Co., 40 U. C. Q. B. 160.

3. Noise Incident to Operation Not Actionable. — Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kan. 552; Covington, etc., El. R. Transfer, etc., Co. v. Kleymeier, 105 Ky. 609; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Gross, (Ky. 1897) 43 S. W. Rep. 203; Cosby v. Owensboro, etc., R. Co., 10 Bush

7. Additional Tracks. — Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Gross, (Ky. 1897) 43 S. W. Rep. 203.

Ownership of Fee Immaterial — Statute of Limitations. — Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Davis, 71 Ill. App. 99.

8. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Eisert, 127 Ind. 156; White v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 122 Ind.

(c) Limitations. — The time within which an action of this nature must be brought is a matter of local law dependent upon the statute of limitations of the particular state.¹

(d) Defenses — aa. MUNICIPAL LICENSE. — As a general rule a license from a city to use a street constitutes no defense to an action against a railroad company to recover damages arising from such use.²

bb. RELEASE OF DAMAGES. — An abutting owner who has executed to the railroad company a release of all damages is bound thereby, and, in the absence of proof that such release was procured by fraud or deception, he cannot afterwards recover damages for any injuries resulting from the proper construction and operation of the road, or from the laying of additional tracks.³

cc. ESTOPPEL. — An abutting owner who has agreed to the occupation of a street by a railroad cannot question its right to maintain its tracks therein, nor can his grantee.⁴ So where a railroad company has located its road in a street because of inducements held out by an abutting owner, the latter is estopped to sue for damages resulting from the use of the street.⁵

(e) Measure of Damages. — The measure of damages in an action of this nature is generally the diminution in the market or rental value of the plaintiff's property resulting from the occupation of the street by the railroad.⁶ Remote

317; Hileman v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 113 Iowa 591; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. O'Connor, 42 Neb. 90.

1. In Iowa the statutory period of limitation is five years. Pratt v. Des Moines Northwestern R. Co., 72 Iowa 249. And the statute begins to run when the track is laid. Mulholland v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 60 Iowa 740.

In Kentucky the statutory limitation is five years. Where the action is for damages naturally resulting from the proper operation of the road the statute runs from the time when the cars begin to run; but when the damages are caused by improper operation it does not begin to run until the injury is inflicted. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ky. 109.

But the above rules do not apply where the occupation of the street by the railroad is unauthorized. Klosterman v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (Ky. 1900) 56 S. W. Rep. 820.

In Ohio the period of limitation is two years from the completion of the road. Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Mowatt, 35 Ohio St. 284; Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Gardner, 45 Ohio St. 309. But see Little Miami R. Co. v. Hambleton, 40 Ohio St. 496.

Co. v. Calvert, 110 Ind. 555; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Hicks, 30 Kan. 288.

Release Construed. — A release of damages resulting from the operation of a railroad in front of certain specified lots does not bar the abutting owner from suing for injuries to other lots not mentioned in the release. McDonald v. Southern California R. Co., (Cal. 1895) 41 Pac. Rep. 812.

In Texas it has been held that an abutting owner may sue for damages notwithstanding the fact that he was one of a number of persons who procured the right of way for the railroad by contract with the company. Taylor, etc., R. Co. v. Robson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. Rep. 37.

2. Street Work. — "Street work" is a phrase of common usage, and has a well-defined signification. The words mean exactly what they indicate upon their face, namely, work upon a street — work in repairing or making a street." Electric Light, etc., Co. v. San Bernardino, 100 Cal. 351.

3. Stress of Weather. — A contract for carriage of live stock relieved the carrier for delay caused by stress of weather. It was held that delay caused in midwinter by very cold weather, whereby the pipes froze so that water could not be carried from the tank to the boiler, was not, in the latitude of Indiana, within the meaning of the phrase stress of weather in the contract. "It is not shown that the weather was unusual for that latitude." Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Heath, 22 Ind. App. 47.

4. In Frier v. Jackson, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 509, it was said: "In giving my opinion in the case of Van Gorden v. Jackson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 462, I said that the word stretching, in its common use in grants during the early periods of the English colonial government here, was applied either to the extent of a single line or to a rolling location, in which the breadth, being described by lines or surfaces, was carried with such breadth to the object described at its terminus. This I still think correct, when applied either to a line or to a rolling patent, not limited in its lateral extension after departing from its base."

5. Strict Compliance. — The rule that the right to attach on meene process can be acquired only by a strict compliance with the terms of the statute has been construed to mean by a substantial compliance therewith. Hoormann v. Climax Cycle Co., 9 N. Y. App. Div. 585, per Barrett, J.

6. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Watt, 51 La. Ann. 1351.

7. Strictest and Utmost. — An instruction that a carrier was bound to exercise the strictest vigilance in carrying a passenger with the terms of the destination was held to be unobjectionable, and the phrases "utmost vigilance" and "strictest vigilance" in this connection were held to be synonymous. Waller v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 83 Mo. 616. See also Kelly v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 70 Mo. 609, and the title CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS, vol. 5, p. 558.

8. Strictly County Purpose. — A constitutional provision prohibited a county from incurring a debt for any other than strictly county purposes. In construing this provision the court said: "The word strictly lends little or no additional meaning to the provision. It could not have been intended thereby to limit counties to ordinary running expenses, and a canal may be as strictly a county purpose as a highway or a bridge, etc." Lancey v. King County, 15 Wash. 12.

9. Strictly Confidential. (See also the titles CIVIL SERVICE, vol. 6, p. 93; PUBLIC OFFICERS, vol. 23, p. 440.) — A statute prohibited the removal of veterans except after a hearing upon due notice upon a charge made, but provided further that the act should not be considered to apply to the position of private secretary or deputy of an official or department, or to any person holding a strictly confidential position. It was held that a secretary of a fire department in the city of New York held a strictly confidential position within this statute. People v. Scannell, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 360.

ing 33 N. Y. App. Div. 207, it was held that a subpoena server in the office of the district attorney was in a strictly confidential position.

1. Strict Measure. — After a description of land conveyed in a deed by metes and bounds were the following words: "containing one hundred and eighty acres, strict measure." It was held that a deficiency of nearly nine acres in the quantity of land was no breach of the covenant of title. Andrews v. Rue, 34 N. J. L. 402.

2. Strict Settlement. — In Davenport v. Davenport, 1 Hem. & M. 779, it was said: "The term strict settlement, without more, is understood, in accordance with the common form of such instruments, to imply estates for life without impeachment of waste; in fact, the largest possible estate consistent with the preservation of the property in the family, comprising, as such settlements do in their ordinary form, the largest powers for jointures, portions, and the like, so as to make the tenant for life, as nearly as may be, owner, so far as that character can be separated from the power of alienation." See also Douglas v. Congreve, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 1, 33 E. C. L. 261.

3. Striking Balance. — As to the use of the term striking a balance in the sense of agreeing upon a balance, see Rose v. Bradley, 91 Wis. 619. See also the title ACCOUNTS, vol. 1, p. 433.

4. Stringer. (See also the title MINES AND MINING CLAIMS, vol. 20, p. 677.) — In McShane v. Kenkle, 18 Mont. 215, it was said that a stringer is "commonly understood by miners to be a crack or crevice filled by mineral deposit, and occurring in the country rock, and by means of which the prospector anticipates being led to an ore body or deposit of commercial value."

5. Strip of Steel. — In Magone v. Vom Cleff, (C. C. A.) 70 Fed. Rep. 981, it was said: "The evidence showed that the merchandise was steel varying from six to twelve millimeters in width, from twelve-hundredths to twenty-hundredths of a millimetre in thickness, and from two hundred to five hundred feet in length. It is imported in coils, and used for the manufacture of steel tape measures. Manifestly, each of these long, narrow coils is fairly within the ordinary meaning of the words 'steel strip,' since it is steel, and is 'a narrow piece, comparatively long,' which is the definition of strip given by Webster's Unabridged and by the Century Dictionary."

6. Strong — Relative Term. — In People v. Crilley, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 248, it was said: "The words strong and 'weak' are relative terms, both having reference to the medium of the class to which they are applied — one being above and the other below it."

7. Strong Liquors. — See People v. Crilley, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 248.

8. Strongly Corroborated. — Under a statute permitting a conviction of perjury on the testimony of one credible witness strongly corroborated by other evidence, "the corroborating evidence must relate to a material matter, that is, must tend to show the falsity of defendant's oath, and taken all together, it must be, in the opinion of both the court and the jury, strong, that is, cogent, powerful, forcible, calculated to make a deep or effectual impression upon the mind. But this character of corroborating evidence may be produced by the proof of independent facts and circumstances which when considered separately would not be sufficient, but when considered in the concrete would be strong." Hernandez v. State, 18 Tex. App. 150, 51 Am. Rep. 297. See also the title PERJURY, vol. 22, pp. 694, 695.

9. Struck Juries. — A statute enacted that on the trial of any indictment the attorney-general should be entitled to challenge peremptorily three of the panel of jurors, "provided that this act shall not apply to cases of struck juries." It was held that the term struck juries in the statute was used in its technical meaning. Cook v. State, 24 N. J. L. 847.

hammer or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid according to the terms of the sale.¹

STRUCTURAL DAMAGES.—See note 2.

STRUCTURE. (See also the title MECHANICS' LIENS, vol. 20, p. 255.)—In the broadest sense a structure is any production or piece of work artificially built up or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner; any construction;² that which is built; a building; especially a building of some size or magnificence; an edifice.³

1. Struck Off.—Sherwood v. Reade, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 439, per Bockee, senator, quoted in State v. Hoboken Second Nat. Bank, 84 Md. 331.

Sale Set Aside.—In State v. Hoboken Second Nat. Bank, 84 Md. 325, where a statute declared that a certain tax should be paid each and every time property should be struck off at an auction sale, it was held that the term struck off must be treated as signifying a consummated sale, and did not include one subsequently set aside.

2. Structural Damages.—See Toronto, etc., R. Co. v. Kerner, 28 Ont. 14.

3. Structure.—Karasek v. Peier, 22 Wash. 425, quoting Cent. Dict.

Upon the meaning of the term structure in a mechanics' lien, in Haskell v. Gallagher, 20 Ind. App. 225, the court said: "The term, when applied to a material thing made by human labor, whether considered etymologically or with reference to common usage or with regard to the words by which it is immediately preceded in the statute, means something composed of parts or portions which have been put together by human exertion."

Demolished Building.—Under a Texas statute defining arson as the wilful burning of any building, edifice, or structure inclosed with walls and covered, it was held, in Mulligan v. State, 25 Tex. App. 199, 8 Am. St. Rep. 435, that a person could not be convicted of arson who first pulled down a crib and then burned the materials.

Fences.—A statute made it criminal to displace, remove, or destroy "a rail, sleeper, switch, bridge, viaduct, culvert, embankment, or structure * * * appertaining to or connected with a railway." It was held not to be applicable to a structure, such as a fence, not constituting any part of the railroad proper. State v. Walsh, 43 Minn. 444.

But a fence has been held to be a structure within the meaning of a statute providing for an injunction to restrain the malicious erection of any structure intended to spite, injure, or annoy an adjoining proprietor. Karasek v. Peier, 22 Wash. 419.

Structure—Oil Well.—An oil well has been held to be a structure within a mechanics' lien law. Haskell v. Gallagher, 20 Ind. App. 224.

Ship.—In Chaffee v. Union Dry Dock Co., 68 N. Y. App. Div. 578, it was held that a ship in the course of construction in a dry dock was a structure within the New York labor law. As to the meaning of structure in this connection, see Wingert v. Krakauer, 76 N. Y. App. Div. 34.

4. Karasek v. Peier, 22 Wash. 424, quoting Webst. Dict.

Mines.—In Helm v. Chapman, 66 Cal. 291, it was said that a mine or pit might be called a structure. See also Williams v. Mountaineer Gold Min. Co., 102 Cal. 141. But see Watson v. Noonday Min. Co., 37 Oregon 287.

Railroads.—In Rutherford v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 35 Ohio St. 559, it was held, applying the ejusdem generis rule, that a railroad was not a structure within the meaning of a statute providing for a mechanics' lien on "any house, mill, manufactory, or other building, fixture, bridge, or other structure." See also Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. J. E. Potts Salt, etc., Co., (C. C. A.) 63 Fed. Rep. 11.

But in Giant-Powder Co. v. Oregon Pac. R. Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 473, it was said: "A railway is literally and technically a structure. It consists of the bed or foundation, which may be of earth, stone, or trestle-work, on which are laid the ties and rails. These, taken together, constitute a structure in the full sense of the word—a something joined together, built, constructed." See also Ban v. Columbia Southern R. Co., (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. Rep. 31; Forbes v. Willamette Falls Electric Co., 19 Oregon 61.

A Railway Train.—A Connecticut statute provided that when an injury on a highway was caused by a structure legally placed upon it by a railroad company, the company should be liable therefor. It was held that a moving train of cars was not a structure within the meaning of the statute, the court saying that the word obviously referred to some permanent stationary erection. Lee v. Barkhamsted, 46 Conn. 213.

Telegraph Company.—In Forbes v. Willamette Falls Electric Co., 19 Oregon 61, it was held that poles set in the ground and connected by wire for the transmission of electricity constitute a structure within the statute.

Seating.—An English statute provided that where a building or structure was about to be begun, the builder should serve a building notice on the district surveyor. The owners of a certain large building situated in London, called the Agricultural Hall, which was used for the purpose of public exhibitions or shows, were possessed of certain movable seating consisting of tiers of wooden platforms and capable of accommodating upwards of three thousand people, which seating they from time to time erected for the accommodation of the spectators at such of the exhibitions as required it. It was held that such seating was not a "building, structure, or work" within the meaning of the statute. Venner v. M'Donell, (1897) 1 Q. B. 421.

Wagon Road.—In Williams v. Toledo Coal Co., 25 Oregon 426, a wagon road was held not to be a structure as the latter term was used in a mechanics' lien law.

STUMP. (See also the titles LOGS AND LUMBER, vol. 19, p. 522; TIMBER.) — One of the definitions of the word "stump" given by Webster is: "The part of a tree or plant remaining in the earth after the stem or trunk is cut off; the stub." This is its usual meaning.⁷

STUMPAGE. (See also the titles LOGS AND LUMBER, vol. 19, p. 522; TIMBER.) — "Stumpage" means the sum to be paid by agreement to an owner for trees standing (or lying) upon his land, the party purchasing being permitted to enter upon the land and to cut down and remove such trees. In other words, it is the price paid for a license to cut. Usually the price is measured according to the thousand feet cut in an operation, but it may be by the tree, or the cord, or the like. As a general thing the practice is for the owner, in some form of agreement, to retain a lien on the lumber cut for payment of the stumpage due thereon. Stumpage on lumber is somewhat of the nature of a percentage paid on copyright, or of a royalty for the use of a patent, or of a duty paid on mineral productions.⁸

Wall. — The question whether a wall is a "building, structure, or erection" within the meaning of the English Metropolis Management Act, 1862, § 75, depends on the height of the wall and the purpose for which it is built. Lavy v. London County Council, (1895) 2 Q. B. 577, affirming (1895) 1 Q. B. 915, wherein it was held that a dwarf boundary wall between two and three feet high was not within the act.

1. Strumpet. — In Williams v. Bryant, 4 Ala. 44, it was held that a charge in a declaration that a woman was called a whore was not established by proving that she was called a strumpet.

2. Stubble. — As to evidence of usage held to be admissible to prove that the word stubble used in an agreement included and designated whatever was left on the ground after the harvest time, see Callahan v. Stanley, 57 Cal. 478.

3. Stub Book. — In Noble v. Douglas, 56 Kan. 92, the introduction in evidence of a stub book of tax-sale assignments, without any further showing than that it was found in the vault of the office of the county treasurer of the county, was held to be error, the court saying: "This stub book was not admissible under section 387 [378] of the Code of Civil Procedure. It could hardly be called a book of account, and there was no proof whatever as to when the entries were made, who made them, nor of their correctness." See generally the title DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE, vol. 9, p. 918.

4. Stub Train. — See Curl v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 63 Iowa 426.

5. Stud Poker. (See also the title GAMING, vol. 14, p. 664.) — In Flynn v. State, 34 Ark. 441, it was held that proof of playing stud poker would sustain an indictment for playing poker.

6. Stuff. — As to parol evidence held to be admissible to explain the meaning of the word stuff in a contract of sale, see Johnston v. Wilson, 28 U. C. C. P. 432.

Cross-examination. — One sense of the word stuff has been said to be "trash; nonsense; foolish or irrational language." State v. Weems, 96 Iowa 426, wherein it was held to be improper to ask a witness on cross-examination whether he thought it would benefit him "to tell that stuff." The court said that in the question stuff evidently meant "falsehood," and had the witness said "yes," he would have said inferentially that what he had said was false.

7. Stamp. — Cremer v. Portland, 36 Wis. 96, holding that an averment, in a complaint against a town, that there was a large stump in or near the middle of the road, against which the plaintiff's wagon struck, was sufficient.

8. Stampage. — Blood v. Drummond, 67 Me. 478.

Stumpage is the compensation paid to an owner of land by another for the privilege of going on the premises and cutting down timber for his own use. Baker v. Whiting, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 484, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 787.

The defendant, by a written agreement, promised to convey to the plaintiff an interest in certain timber lands when he had received his advances and certain costs and expenses "from the stumpage cut on the land." It was held that "stumpage cut on the land" meant money received or expected to be received from the sale of licenses to cut and remove timber from the land. Blood v. Drummond, 67 Me. 476.

SUBCONTRACT — SUBCONTRACTOR. — (See also the titles INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS, vol. 16, p. 186; MECHANICS' LIENS, vol. 20, p. 255; WORKING CONTRACTS.) — A subcontractor is an under-contractor — one who takes under the original contract and is to perform in accordance with the original contract;⁴ one who has entered into a contract, express or implied, for the performance of an act with a person who has already contracted for its performance.⁵

SUBDIVISION. (See also SECTION, vol. 25, p. 177.) — See note 6.

SUBFREIGHT. — See note 7.

SUBJECT. (See also the titles ALIENS, vol. 2, p. 64; CITIZENSHIP, vol. 6, p. 14.) — The term "subject" refers to one who owes obedience to the laws.⁶

SUBJECT — SUBJECT-MATTER. — I. The word "subject" as a noun is that on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed; as, a

1. Stump-tail in Sense of Depreciated Currency. — See Webster v. Pierce, 35 Ill. 163.

2. Stupor and Excitement. — In Baldridge v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1903) 74 S. W. Rep. 919, it was said: "Stupor means a different thing from excitement. It signifies a 'suspension or great diminution of sensibility, a state in which the faculties are deadened or dazed.'"

3. Style in Sense of Designs or Patterns. — See Herrick v. Noble, 27 Vt. 6.

Style of Process. — See Thompson v. Bickford, 19 Minn. 17; Hanna v. Russell, 12 Minn. 80. And see the title SUMMONS AND PROCESS, 20 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1116.

Right of Support. — In Gorey v. Kelly, 64 Neb. 608, the lower court instructed the jury that the word "support," in a civil damage act, did not mean the bare necessities of life, but included all such means of support as would enable the plaintiffs to live in the style and condition, and with a degree of comfort, suitable and becoming to their station in life. In holding this instruction to be no error the court said: "The use of the term style is criticised as being a matter purely of individual taste. In Warrick v. Rounds, 17 Neb. 411, it is said that 'the right of support is not necessarily limited to the bare necessities of life. The condition of the family is proper to be considered by the jury.' The word style means mode or manner. We are unable to see how the use of the word style in the instruction could have worked to the defendant's prejudice."

4. Subcontractor. — Avery v. Ionia County, 71 Mich. 547. See also Farmer's L. & T. Co. v. Canada, etc., R. Co., 127 Ind. 257; Kent v. New York Cent. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 628.

In Duignan v. Montana Club, 16 Mont. 192, it was said: "A subcontractor in the second, third, or any degree is one of the persons 'furnishing things or doing work.'"

Subcontract. — In Central Trust Co. v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 54 Fed. Rep. 724, it was said: "The language of the first section is 'all persons who perform labor, or who furnish labor, * * * by contract * * * with the owner or owners, * * * or by subcontract thereunder, shall have a lien,' etc., and the controlling words on this inquiry are 'by subcontract thereunder.' Subcontract is defined to be 'a contract under another,' and 'thereunder,' 'under that or this.' See Worcester and Webster. The sentence means contracts under the contract made with the owner or owners. Worcester defines a subcontractor as 'one who contracts for the principal contractor.'"

Distinguished from Laborer and Materialman. — The term subcontractor in a mechanics'-lien law does not include a laborer or materialman. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Canada, etc., R. Co., 127 Ind. 257. See also Merriman v. Jones, 43 Minn. 29.

5. Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 44; followed in Lester v. Houston, 101 N. Car. 605.

8. Republica v. Chapman, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 60.

Natural-born Subject. — In Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 639, it was said: "By the common law, all persons born within the allegiance of the crown of England were natural-born subjects, without reference to the status or condition of their parents. So if a Frenchman and his wife came into England, and had a son during their stay, he was a liege man." This case is extensively quoted under the title CITIZENSHIP, vol. 6, p. 17, where also additional cases are cited.

subject for contemplation or controversy; ¹ that of which anything is affirmed or predicated; the theme of a proposition or discourse; that which is spoken of.²

II. The meaning of the word "subject" as an adjective is being under the dominion of; as, states subject to a foreign power.³ "The word 'subject' is

1. Subject.—Glen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Hall, 61 N. Y. 236.

Broad Meaning of Term.—In Dorsey's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 195, it was said: "The word subject has a large signification, often embracing different kinds, different classes, and various modes, all belonging to the general subject."

Indefinite Term.—In Ex p. Pollard, 40 Ala. 98, it was said: "Subject is a very indefinite word. A phrase may state the subject in a very general or indefinite manner, or with minute particularity." See also Ex p. Thomas, 113 Ala. 1.

Bill to Contain No More than One Subject.—See the title STATUTES, vol. 26, pp. 572, 575. See also OBJECT, vol. 21, p. 756.

In Devlin v. New York, 63 N. Y. 30, it was said: "The subject of an act is that concerning which it is enacted, and not the substance of the act itself." See also Morton v. Comptroller-Gen., 4 S. Car. 442.

Subject to Be Expressed in Title—Amending Act—Reference by Number Insufficient.—In State v. Superior Court, 28 Wash. 317, it was held, contrary to what appeared to be the settled doctrine in that state (see the title STATUTES, vol. 26, p. 592), that a constitutional provision requiring the subject of a statute to be expressed in the title was not satisfied by an amendatory act which in its title referred to the act amended by its section number in the code only.

Subject of Action.—In Chamboret v. Cagney, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 41 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 130, it was said: "These words must be deemed to mean the subject-matter in dispute, or, to be still more explicit, the facts constituting the cause of action."

"The subject of an action is either property (as illustrated by real action) or a violated right." Glen, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Hall, 61 N. Y. 236.

Same—Cause of Action Distinguished.—In Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 406, it was said: "The 'subject of action' is not the 'cause of action,' or the cause of any action, or any cause of action. It is simply one of the elements of each of the several causes of action, uniting and binding them together in one action." See also CAUSE OF ACTION, vol. 5, p. 777.

Same—Situated Within the State.—Under the former New York statute regulating actions against foreign corporations (see the title FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, vol. 13, pp. 899, 900), it was held that an action based on a contract executed, delivered, and made payable in a foreign country was not a case where the subject of the action was situated within the state. Campbell v. Champlain, etc., R. Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 412.

Under the same statute, in an action for the breach of a contract made out of the state, it was held that the subject of the action was the claim therein asserted by the plaintiff, and the satisfaction of which he seeks out of the property, and that the property itself is not the subject of the action. Whitehead v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 218.

Same—Real Property.—Under a statute providing that certain actions "must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated," an action to subject lands to the payment of debts, etc., is properly brought in a county where two or three tracts of land sought to be charged are situated. Barrett v. Watts, 13 S. Car. 441.

Same—Jurisdiction of Subject of Action and Jurisdiction of Action.—Where a statute providing for service of nonresidents by publication required an affidavit stating that "the court has jurisdiction of the subject of the action," it was held that an affidavit was a compliance with the statute which alleged that the court had "jurisdiction of the action," for the reason, apparently, that the latter term necessarily included both the subject of the action and of the parties thereto, and that the surplusage in the actual affidavit did not vitiate it. Hartzell v. Vigen, 6 S. Dak. 117.

Same—Intervention.—Under a New York statute authorizing the intervention of a third party in an action (see the title INTERVENTION, vol. 17, p. 182), the requirement of "an interest in the subject" of the action must be understood of an interest in the subject-matter of the action. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Hagemeyer, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 55. See also Chapman v. Forbes, 123 N. Y. 539; Hilton Bridge Constr. Co. v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 145 N. Y. 396.

Subject of Action Distinguished from Object of Action.—See OBJECT, vol. 21, p. 756.

Subject Insured.—In Granger v. Howard Ins. Co., 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 203, in construing a statute allowing the purchaser or assignee of the subject insured to take an assignment of the policy and sue thereon in his own name, it was held that to bring himself within the act "the plaintiff must have the whole interest insured," for "it is not any interest in the subject insured which authorizes the assignment of the policy and the right of action."

defined by Webster as taken from the Latin word subjectus, meaning 'lying under.' Webster gives the meaning of the word 'subject' to be 'placed or situated under that in which any quality, attribute, or relation inheres to bring under the power.' "1

III. The subject-matter is the subject or matter presented for consideration

Bacon, 147 Mo. 312, per Sherwood, J., dissenting, quoting Standard Dict.

1. Subject. — Territory v. Neville, 10 Okla. 102.

Subject To. — The provision in a memorandum of an agreement for a transfer of stock that the transfer was "subject to" a certain agreement named "gave to the transferee the benefits, as well as it imposed the disadvantages, provided for in that agreement." Bacon v. Grossman, 71 N. Y. App. Div. 578.

Same — Conclusiveness of Recital that Instrument Is Subject to Prior Mortgage. — See the title RECITALS, vol. 24, p. 63.

Same — Act Opening New Territory. — An act of Congress provided that lands in the Cherokee Outlet, when opened to settlement, should be subject to the organic act of the territory of Oklahoma. It was held that this meant that the land should be placed or situated under the organic act of the territory, and that all the provisions, regulations, requirements, and benefits of the said organic act should apply to and have full force and effect in every and all the counties composing the said Cherokee Outlet. Territory v. Neville, 10 Okla. 79.

Subject to Constitution and Laws. — Of this phrase in a state constitution in reference to municipal charters it has been said that it "implies a separation from the state at large for certain purposes, and also unnecessarily implies an independent separation for the exercise of some rights and powers, otherwise a provision of the constitution making them 'subject to' would be a wholly useless and unnecessary provision." State v. Carson, 6 Wash. 253.

The Missouri Constitution requires municipal charters to be "in harmony with and subject to" the constitution and laws of the state. In Kansas City v. Bacon, 147 Mo. 312, Sherwood, J., dissenting, remarked that subject to meant restrained by, controlled by, and of consequence in harmony with the constitution and laws. See also HARMONY, vol. 15, p. 286.

Subject to Check. — A charge that "subject to check" meant subject to payment without limitation or restriction, except that the check must be presented to the bank within banking hours, on banking days, was held to be substantially correct. Dottenheim v. Union Sav. Bank, etc., Co., 114 Ga. 788.

Subject to Control. — Where a father deposited money for his daughter in her name, subject to the father's control, it was held that this created a trust in the money for the benefit of the daughter, and that the words "subject to the control" of the father did not import the retaining of ownership or title, but simply of the management. Millard v. Clark, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 147.

"Subjection to the Will and Control," said of land, is synonymous with possessio pedis and "occupation," and signifies actual possession. See Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 690, quoted in McKenzie v. Brandon, 71 Cal. 211.

Subject to Correction — Bill of Lading. (See also the title BILLS OF LADING, vol. 4, p. 531.) — Where a bill of lading recited that the weights therein named were subject to correction, it was held that the clause "subject to correction" deprived the bill of lading of conclusive effect. Johnson v. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co., 9 Tex. Civ. App. 619; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Nelson, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 345. See also Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Loonie, 84 Tex. 262; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Roberts, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 370.

"Subject to Foregoing Provisions of My Will." (See generally the title WILLS.) — In Thorp v. Munro, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 249, it was said: "The words 'subject to' the foregoing provisions of this, my will," leave no doubt upon the question. The lexicographers define the word subject as meaning 'to make liable; to bring under the control or action of; to make subservient.' No other interpretation can be given to the language thus employed, which, indeed, may be regarded without perversion of its meaning as an express direction to that effect."

Subject to Mortgage. — See the titles MORTGAGES, vol. 20, p. 987; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Subject to Overflow. — In Heath v. Wallace, 138 U. S. 584, in discussing whether lands "subject to overflow" are overflowed lands, it was said: "The term 'overflowed,' as thus used, has reference to a permanent condition of the lands to which it is applied, * * * while 'subject to periodical overflow' has reference to a condition which may or may not exist, and which when it does exist is of a temporary character."

"Subject to Be Produced Thereafter in Evidence in Any Court of Law or Equity in Upper Canada." — See Manary v. Dash, 23 U. C. Q. B. 580.

Subject to Service of Process. — The clause of the Kansas Constitution providing that legislators shall not be "subject to the service of any civil process during the session" does not give a personal privilege which may be exercised by the legislator or waived by him, but means that he "is not 'liable to' the service of civil process." Cook v. Senior, 3 Kan. App. 278.

Subject to Following Stipulations. — In a lease there was no express proviso for re-entry, but the lease was stated to be made "subject to the following stipulations." Then followed a number of clauses, one of which was that the lessee should not assign the lease without the consent in writing of the lessor. It was held that the words subject, etc., had not the effect of making the succeeding clauses conditions so as to cause a forfeiture and right of entry for their breach, and therefore that ejectment would not lie for assigning the lease without the consent of the lessor. McIntosh v. Samo, 24 U. C. C. P. 625.

Definitions. SUBJECT AND CITIZEN — SUBJECTIVE SYMPTOMS.

in some written or oral statement or discussion;¹ the subject.²

SUBJECT AND CITIZEN. — "'Subjects' and 'citizens' are, in a degree, convertible terms as applied to natives; and though the term 'citizen' seems to be appropriate to republican freemen, yet we are, equally with the inhabitants of all other countries, 'subjects,' for we are equally bound by allegiance and subjection to the government and law of the land."³

SUBJECTIVE SYMPTOMS. — See note 4.

Contracts — Parol Evidence Admissible to Ascertain or to Explain Subject-matter. — Sorensen v. Keyser, 2 U. S. App. 177, 51 Fed. Rep. 30; Consolidated Coal, etc., Co. v. Mercer, 16 Ind. App. 504. See also the title PAROL EVIDENCE, vol. 21, pp. 1108, 1119.

2. Jurisdiction of Subject-matter. (See the title JURISDICTION, vol. 17, p. 1060.) — The term subject-matter is defined as "the cause, the object, the thing in dispute." People v. Lindsay, 1 Idaho 399, quoting Bouv. L. Dict.

"By jurisdiction of the subject-matter is meant jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the particular case belongs." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sutton, 130 Ind. 405. See also Goodman v. Winter, 64 Ala. 410; Block v. Henderson, 82 Ga. 23; Perkins v. Hayward, 132 Ind. 105.

Jurisdiction of the subject-matter has been defined to be "the power to adjudge the general question involved." Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 229, quoted in In re Peraltareavis, 8 N. Mex. 27. See also Groenvelt v. Burwell, 1 Ld. Raym. 466.

Same — In Suits for Divorce. (See also the title DIVORCE, vol. 9, p. 739.) — In Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 228, it was said: "A text-writer of repute says that 'it is the act or acts which constitute the cause of action' which 'is the subject-matter in a suit for divorce.' See 3 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 206. And in Holmes v. Holmes, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 388, the learned and able judge who delivered the opinion of the court speaks of the acts relied upon to obtain a divorce as being the subject-matter. The definitions of lexicographers imply a broader scope to the phrase, a more general meaning. It is 'the cause; the object; the thing in dispute.' Bouv. L. Dict. 'The matter or thought presented for consideration in some statement or discussion.' Webst. Dict. * * * So that there is a more general meaning to the phrase subject-matter, in this connection, than power to act upon a particular state of facts. It is the power to act upon the general and, so to speak, the abstract question, and to determine and adjudge whether the particular facts presented call for the exercise of the abstract power."

Interrogatories. — A statute provided that a party interrogated might require that the whole of the answers upon any subject-matter inquired of should be read if part of them was read. It was held that subject-matter did not mean the particular fact covered by any one or more interrogations, but the matter to be in issue by the pleas and thus to be inquired of. Churchill v. Ricker, 100 Mass. 211.

Subject-matter Involved. — In Jacobson v. Miller, 41 Mich. 93, it was said: "The subject-matter involved in a litigation is the right which one party claims as against the other, and demands the judgment of the court upon; as, for example, the right in ejectment to have possession of the lands; in assumpsit to recover a demand; in equity to have a mortgage foreclosed for an amount claimed to be due upon it, or to have specific performance of a contract, and so on."

Subject-matter in Controversy Equivalent to Cause of Action. — See Borst v. Corey, 15 N. Y. 509; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Pinnacle Coal Co., 44 W. Va. 574.

Res Judicata. (See also the title RES JUDICATA, vol. 24, p. 778.) — In Hughes v. Kline, 30 Pa. St. 230, it was said: "Was the subject-matter the same in that case as in this? These words, 'the subject-matter' — terms always used in this connection in the law — indicate plainly that if the substance or essence of the controversy be the same, being between the same parties or privies, then the conclusiveness of the decree or judgment follows."

3. Subject and Citizen. — 2 Kent's Com. (13th ed.) 258, note, quoted in U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 160 U. S. 649. See to the same effect In re Birdsong, 39 Fed. Rep. 601; State v. Manuel, 4 Dev. & B. L. (20 N. Car.) 26. See also the title CITIZENSHIP, vol. 6, p. 16.

Treaty — "Subject" in Treaty Held Equivalent to "Citizen" or "Inhabitant." — The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227.

Treaty Defining "Subject." — In Reg. v. Ganz, 9 Q. B. D. 101, Pollock, B., said: "Then when we come to the third article of the treaty there is an express definition of what is meant by the word subject. It is to include not only naturalized citizens of the country, but also such foreigners as according to the laws of either of the contracting parties are assimilated to subjects, as well as such foreigners who, being domiciled in the country and having married a citizen thereof, have one or more children by that marriage born there."

4. Subjective Symptoms. — Abbot v. Heath, 84 Wis. 316, where a medical expert explained subjective symptoms as symptoms related by the patient, which the physician obtains not by observation, but by questioning.

SUBLEASE — See the titles LANDLORD AND TENANT, vol. 18, p. 149; LEASES, vol. 18, p. 593, and especially as to the distinction between an assignment and a sublease, p. 656 et seq.

SUBMISSION. (See also the title ARBITRATION AND AWARD, vol. 2, p. 539.) — A submission is an act by which parties refer any matter in dispute between them to the decision of a third person.¹ The submission is the agreement of the parties to refer. It is therefore a contract, and will in general be governed by the law concerning contracts.²

SUBMISSION TO COURT (ON AGREED CASE) (See also the title AGREED CASE, 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 384, also in this work CASE, vol. 5, p. 750.) — See note 3.

SUBMIT. (See also SUBMISSION, supra.) — "A thing submitted to another is put under his control."⁴

SUBORDINATE OFFICER. — See note 5.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY. — See the title PERJURY, vol. 22, p. 697.

SUBPŒNA. (See also the title WITNESSES, 22 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1328.) — A subpœna, or, more fully, a subpœna ad testificandum, is defined as "a process to cause a witness to appear and give testimony, commanding him to lay aside all pretenses and excuses and appear before a court or magistrate therein named, at a time therein mentioned, to testify for the party named, under a penalty therein mentioned."⁶

In Chancery Practice a subpœna, or subpœna ad respondendum, is a mandatory writ or process directed to and requiring one or more persons to appear at a time to come and answer the matters charged against him or them under a certain penalty.⁷

1. Garr v. Gomez, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 661, per Seward, senator.

2. Submission. — District of Columbia v. Bailey, 171 U. S. 171, quoting Morse on Arbitration and Award 50.

Remedy for Breach of Agreement to Submit. — In Miller v. Brumbaugh, 7 Kan. 351, Bacon's Abridgment was quoted as follows: "The submission may be by word or deed. If the submission be by word, there is no remedy to enforce the party to perform the award; but reciprocal actions on the case, and an action of debt, will lie if money be awarded, for it is in nature of a simple contract."

Final Submission. — See FINAL — FINALLY, vol. 13, p. 21.

Parol or Written Submission. — In re Cruickshank, 30 U. C. C. P. 466.

Submission and Reference. — By a submission the costs of the "reference and award" were to be in the discretion of the arbitrators, and they directed that the defendants should pay the costs of the "submission and award." It was held that the award was final, for that the costs of the submission included the costs of the reference. The court said: "Submission and 'reference,' we think, mean the same thing, and if the costs of proving the case before the arbitrators can properly be awarded as part of the costs of the reference, they could equally be awarded as part of the costs of the submission, and vice versa." Ellwood v. Middlesex County, 19 U. C. Q. B. 25.

3. Submission to Court. — In Shed v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 67 Mo. 691, it was said: "We do not regard the clerk entitled to a fee for a submission. This term, as used in the statute, is used either in a strictly technical sense (3 Bouv. 553) or else in its statutory import, as, e. g., where 'parties to a question in difference * * * present a submission of the same to any court which would have jurisdiction if any action had been brought,' etc." 2 Wag. Stat., § 25, p. 1056. * * * The legislature may, therefore, be presumed to have employed the term in a sense peculiar to matters in the Circuit Courts, and not as intending by that word to convey the idea of the mere submitting a cause to the court or jury for final determination."

4. Submit. — Brouwer v. Cotheal, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 218. That case turned on a provision of a statute that the books of a corporation should be submitted to the stockholders for examination, and it was held that the stockholder had a right not only to inspect the books, but also to take memoranda. See generally the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, vol. 26, p. 951, especially p. 954.

The word submitted, when used of a proceeding in court, has been said always to imply that the party or parties who submitted dispensed with the benefit of argument. Ridgely v. Carey, 4 Har. & M. (Md.) 174.

Distinguished from Consent. — "There is a difference between consent and submission. Every consent involves a submission, but it by no means follows that a mere submission involves consent." Reg. v. Day, 9 C. & P. 722, 38 E. C. L. 306.

5. Subordinate Officer of Customs. — The collector of customs of the port of New York has been held not to be a subordinate officer of customs. Childs v. Comstock, 69 N. Y. App. Div. 160.

6. Subpœna ad Testificandum. — Alexander v. Harrison, 2 Ind. App. 53, quoting Bouv. L. Dict.; Matter of Strauss, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 613. See also Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 19.

SUBPŒNA DUCES TECUM. (See also the title WITNESSES, 22 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1328.)—See note 1.

SUBPŒNA SERVERS.—See note 2.

Pl. (10th ed.), § 44. And see the title SUMMONS AND PROCESS, 20 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1103. See also 1 Spence's Eq. Jur. 338, 369.

"Under the old chancery practice, every suit was commenced by a writ of subpœna requiring the defendant to appear; hence, in the old books, subpœna is equivalent to 'suit in equity' or 'bill of complaint.' * * * Subpœna to hear judgment was another kind used in chancery practice. It was issued by the party setting down a cause for hearing and served on the opposite party. If the party served did not appear at the hearing the court might make a decree against him." Sweet's L. Dict.

The writ of subpœna is usually said to have been invented by John Waltham, chancellor (or more accurately master of the rolls and later keeper of the seal) under Richard II. 3 Black. Com. 51. But it appears to have been in use in the reign of Edward III. 1 Spence Eq. Jur. 338, note b; 369, note a.

"All the essential parts of the subpœna," says Mr. Kerly (Hist. Eq. 45), "are to be found in writs issued by the authority of Parliament and the council during the reign of Edward III., and the use of the penal clause in statutes and orders of all descriptions was much older." See also "Early English Equity," 1 L. Quar. Rev. 162, by Judge O. W. Holmes.

"The subpœna was the former process to bring in a party to answer a charge before the king in council, * * * and was, for some remedial purposes, a usual process of the Court of Chancery as early as the reign of Edward III., when the jurisdiction of the court was beginning to show traces of a partial independence of that of the council. * * * The present equitable jurisdiction of the court, if not that which was thus exercised at that period, originated in it; and the process was indubitably the same." Winter v. Ludlow, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,891.

1. Subpœna Duces Tecum.—In Matter of Strauss, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 613, it was said: "At common law there was * * * a writ known as a 'subpœna duces tecum,' which, in addition to requiring the attendance of a witness to testify, required him to bring and produce to the court books or papers in his hands tending to elucidate the matter in issue." See generally the title PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS, vol. 23, p. 166.

2. Subpœna Servers.—In People v. Gardiner, 157 N. Y. 523, it was said: "For convenience the persons so appointed have been called subpœna servers, and we shall hereafter speak of them as such, although there is no statutory office of that character. It is a designation of a class of persons in a district attorney's office who are engaged in serving subpœnas as well as in other work." In this case it was held that a subpœna server was in a "strictly confidential position," and therefore not within the New York veteran's act. See STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL, ante, p. 189.

I. DEFINITION AND GENERAL PRINCIPLES — 1. Definition. — Subrogation is the substitution of one person in place of another, whether as a creditor or as the possessor of any other rightful claim, so that he who is substituted succeeds to the rights of the other in relation to the debt or claim and its rights, remedies, or securities.¹

2. Legal and Conventional Subrogation Distinguished. — Subrogation may be either legal or conventional. Legal subrogation is allowed only in cases where the person advancing money to pay the debt of another stands in the position of surety or is compelled to pay the debt to protect his own rights. Conventional subrogation results from an agreement, made either with the debtor or creditor, that the person paying shall be subrogated.²

3. Subrogation an Equitable Doctrine Not Dependent on Contract or Privity. — The right of subrogation is a doctrine of equity jurisprudence. It does not depend on privity or contract, express or implied, except in so far as the known equity may be supposed to be imported into the transaction and thus raise a contract by implication.¹ It is founded on the facts and circumstances of each particular case, and on the principles of natural justice.² The right, however, though not dependent on contract, may be modified or extinguished thereby.³

4. When Subrogation Will Be Allowed in General. — The doctrine of subrogation will be applied, in general, wherever any person, other than a mere volunteer, pays a debt or demand which in equity or good conscience should have been satisfied by another,⁴ or where a liability of one person is discharged out of a fund belonging to another,⁵ or where one person is compelled for his property will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor even in a jurisdiction where contracts between husband and wife are held to be unenforceable. In re Nickerson, 116 Fed. Rep. 1003.

Where the Relation Between the Parties Is Simply that of Debtor and Creditor there is no room for an application of the doctrine of subrogation. Fuller v. Davis 184 Ill. 505. But see infra, this title, III. Subrogation of Creditors.

2. Dependent on Circumstances of Particular Case. — Van Pelt v. Strickland, 60 Kan. 584; Crippen v. Chappel, 35 Kan. 499, 57 Am. Rep. 187; Duke v. Pigman, (Ky. 1901) 62 S. W. Where a Husband Uses the Separate Property of His Wife to redeem a pledge of his own property, without her consent, she will be subrogated to the rights of the pledgee against the husband. Greiner v. Greiner, 58 Cal. 115.

Where a Partner Misappropriates the Partnership Funds in discharging a lien on his individual property, the other partner will be subrogated to the rights of the lienholder for reimbursement. Shinn v. Macpherson, 58 Cal. 596.

When Claimant Has No Real Interest in Fund Used. — In Dover v. Rhea, 108 N. Car. 88, the claim of a daughter to be subrogated to the rights of judgment creditors, whose claims had been satisfied out of lands alleged to have been reserved for her benefit by her deceased father, was denied on the ground that the claimant had never acquired any real interest in the lands in question.

own protection, or that of some interest which he represents, to pay a debt for which another is primarily liable,¹ or wherever a denial of the right would be contrary to equity and good conscience.²

5. When Not Allowed—a. IN GENERAL—WHERE INJUSTICE WOULD RESULT. — Subrogation being the creature of equity it will not be permitted where it would work injustice to the rights of those having equal or superior equities.³ Thus it will not be enforced against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice,⁴ or in favor of a person guilty of fraud,⁵ or for the benefit of one who would thereby be enabled to derive an advantage from, or to establish his claim through, his own wrong or negligence, or inequitable or illegal conduct.⁶

In Mississippi it has been held that the entry of the word "settled" on the judgment docket by the plaintiff's attorney, without showing by whom the payment was made, would not defeat the surety's right of subrogation, even as against a purchaser for value relying on such entry, in the absence of anything to show that the entry was made at the instance or under the direction of the surety. Yates v. Mead, 68 Miss. 787.

But where the party paying the judgment himself causes satisfaction thereof to be certified upon the judgment roll, he cannot be subrogated to the judgment as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser of the debtor's land. Taylor v. Alliance Trust Co., 71 Miss. 694.

5. Party Guilty of Fraud.—Bleakley's Appeal, 66 Pa. St. 187; Greig v. Rice, 66 S. Car. 171; Bates v. Swiger, 40 W. Va. 420. And see Mansur, etc., Implement Co. v. Jones, 143 Mo. 253.

A Mortgagee Who Wrongfully Alters a Mortgage in a material respect, thereby rendering it void, cannot be subrogated to the benefit of another mortgage which was paid off with the money advanced by him. Johnson v. Moore, 33 Kan. 90.

A Purchaser Who Is Guilty of Fraud in Preventing Competition in Bidding at a guardian's sale, and who afterwards pays off a mortgage on the land, will not, if the sale is set aside, be subrogated to the benefit of the mortgage so as to be entitled to the high rate of interest which it carries. Devine v. Harkness, 117 Ill. 145. And to the same effect see Hays's Estate, 159 Pa. St. 381.

6. Party Who Would Benefit by His Own Wrong or Negligence.—German Bank v. U. S., 148 U. S. 573; Wilkinson v. Babbitt, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 207; Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Soutter, 13 Wall. (U. Thus a sub-lessee who has permitted his lessor to sell crops turned over in satisfaction of rent, without giving notice to the superior landlord, cannot, on being compelled to turn over further crops to the superior landlord in satisfaction of his lessor's rent, be subrogated to the rights of such landlord. Starke v. Bernheim, 102 Ala. 464.

Nor will it be enforced at the expense of a legal right,¹ or where resort to a usurious agreement or security would be necessary for its establishment.²

b. NOT ALLOWED IN FAVOR OF ONE ULTIMATELY LIABLE FOR DEBT PAID. — Subrogation will not be permitted in favor of one who is ultimately or really liable for the debt discharged.³ Thus a person who has wrongfully pledged the property of another to secure his own debt cannot be subrogated to the rights of the pledgee on payment of the debt.⁴ Nor is one who has been fully reimbursed for assuming and paying the debt of another entitled to subrogation.⁵

6. When Right to Subrogation Becomes Complete. — It is generally stated by the authorities that the right of subrogation will not be enforced until the creditor or other person to whose place substitution is claimed has been fully satisfied.⁶ But this rule applies only where it is necessary for the protection of the creditor. As against the debtor, subrogation may arise on payment of a part of the debt.⁷

to the benefits of the investment. Rowley v. Towsley, 53 Mich. 329.

Party Participating in Breach of Trust or Tort. — Banks purchasing government bonds from an administrator under circumstances putting them on inquiry as to the authority of the seller, and failing to make such inquiry, cannot, when held liable for conversion of the bonds, be subrogated to the rights, if any, of the estate, or beneficiaries, against the government as joint tortfeasor in conversion, for improperly transferring the bonds. German Bank v. U. S., 148 U. S. 573.

The rule approved in this case, that one who has been held liable for a breach of trust or a tort cannot avail himself of the principles of subrogation, does not seem to have been observed in Huff v. Hatch, 2 Disney (Ohio) 63, where a banker, who by his neglect had caused the discharge of an indorser of a note, was subrogated to the rights of the holder against the estate of a maker.

Subrogation Refused to Maker of Note. — In Texas it has been held that the maker of a note, on paying the same, is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the payee on the note against a third person who has contracted to pay the note, but has failed to do so. Halbert v. Paddleford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 33 S. W. Rep. 592.

7. Nature and Extent of Rights Acquired — a. PARTY SUBROGATED ENTITLED TO ALL RIGHTS OF ORIGINAL CREDITOR. — A party entitled to subrogation will be placed in all respects in the place of the party to whose rights he is subrogated.¹ Thus where the original creditor would have been entitled to set aside a conveyance by the debtor on the ground of fraud, a party subrogated to his rights is entitled to pursue the same remedy.² And if the debt paid is a preferred debt he will be entitled to the preference.³

Subrogation to the Rights of a Landlord includes the landlord's lien,⁵ and his right to distrain.⁶

Subrogation to the Rights of a Junior Mortgagee includes the right of the latter to redeem from a prior mortgage, and to foreclose his own.⁷

Subrogation to the Rights of the Vendor in a Conditional Sale of a chattel includes the right to take possession of the chattel on failure of the vendee to pay the purchase price.⁸

Subrogation to Rights of Government. — According to some authorities a person who is subrogated to the rights of the state will be entitled to all rights of priority existing in its favor,⁹ and also to the exemption of the state from the operation of the statute of limitations.¹⁰ But in a recent case a distinction has been drawn between subrogation to the rights of private persons and subrogation to public rights and remedies, as regards the extent of the rights acquired.¹¹

b. RIGHTS ACQUIRED NO GREATER THAN THOSE OF ORIGINAL CREDITOR. — The rights acquired by a party entitled to subrogation cannot be

1. Party Subrogated Takes All Rights of Original Creditor. — Sperry v. Butler, 75 Conn. 369; Whitbeck v. Ramsay, 74 Ill. App. 542; King v. Dwight, 3 Rob. (La.) 2; *Ohio L. Ins., etc., Co. v. A person who advances money to take up a note may be subrogated to the creditor's right of action against a corporation for the fraud of its transfer agent in certifying that a certificate of stock, pledged as collateral, was valid, when in fact such certificate was fraudulently issued by the transfer agent. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Forty-second St., etc., R. Co., 74 Hun (N. Y.) 505; Hellman v. Forty-second St., etc., R. Co., 74 Hun (N. Y.) 529, affirmed without opinion 148 N. Y. 727.

2. Right to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyance Included. — Bragg v. Patterson, 85 Ala. 233; Rudy v. Austin, 56 Ark. 73, 35 Am. St. Rep. 85; Tatum v. Tatum, 1 Ired. Eq. (36 N. 7. Subrogation to Rights of Junior Mortgagee. — Schell City Bank v. Reed, 54 Mo. App. 94. See infra, this title, IV. Persons Interested in Encumbered Estates — Junior Mortgagees, Judgment Creditors, etc.

8. Subrogation to Rights of Vendor in Conditional Sale of Chattel. — Nye v. Daniels, 75 Vt. 81.

9. Person Subrogated to Rights of State Entitled to Priorities. — Orem v. Wrightson, 51 Md. 34, 34 Am. Rep. 286.

10. Exemption from Statute of Limitations. — American Bonding Co. v. National Mechanic's Bank, (Md. 1903) 55 Atl. Rep. 395.

11. Subrogation to Rights of Government Distinguished. — In Sperry v. Butler, 75 Conn. 369, the court, after stating the general rule that a party subrogated is put in all respects in the place of the original creditor, said: "When the case is one of the subrogation of the individual to public rights and remedies, the situation assumes an aspect not presented where the substitution relates to private rights. Questions of public policy — questions as to the propriety of turning over the governmental machinery to individuals, and conferring upon them the powers of the organized public — at once arise. The inquiry becomes one not of legislative power to provide for a complete or partial substitution, but one of judicial discretion in the administration of equitable principles under equitable considerations. So it is that the courts ought to hesitate, and have hesitated, to apply the doctrine of subrogation to cases where the substitution would result in conferring upon individuals rights and powers peculiarly designed for and adapted to public purposes, and as a part of the governmental machinery, without statutory sanction, express or implied."

extended beyond the rights of the party under whom subrogation is claimed.¹ Subrogation contemplates some original privilege on the part of him to whose place substitution is claimed,² and where no such privilege exists, or where it has been waived by the creditor, there is nothing on which the right can be based.³ While a surety who pays the debt of his principal is subrogated to the rights of the holder of the claim, he takes such rights subject to all disqualifications and limitations which attached to them in the hands of his predecessor.⁴

c. RIGHT LIMITED TO REIMBURSEMENT. — Subrogation being a doctrine of equity it will be carried no further than the strict demands of equity and justice require. In general, the equitable lien of one who has paid the debt of another extends only so far as may be necessary for his reimbursement.⁵

II. SURETIES, GUARANTORS, AND PARTIES TO NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS —

equities, rights, remedies, and priorities held by the creditor against the principal, and entitled to enforce them against the latter in a court of equity or of equitable jurisdiction. His right to subrogation is not affected by the fact that he made no stipulation therefor at the time of payment of the debt of his principal, nor by the fact that he was then ignorant of the existence of such right; ⁴ nor will the right be denied him on the ground that he assumed the obligation without being requested to do so by his principal.⁵

1. Absence of Agreement and Ignorance of Right Immaterial.—Simpson v. Ennis, 114 Ga. 208; Hill v. King, 48 Ohio St. 75.

2. Request from Principal Debtor Not Essential.—Mathews v. Aikin, 1 N. Y. 595, in which case the demand for subrogation was resisted by the creditor. But it was also said in this case that the rule might be otherwise where the objection was raised by the principal debtor, especially if the latter was able to show that the surety entered into the obligation not only against his wish or request, but for some purpose of fraud or oppression.

One Who Is Surety for Part Only of a Debt may pay the whole and succeed to the creditor's rights and remedies against those liable for the other part.¹

Payment by the Surety in Person Is Not Essential. — He is equally entitled to subrogation where the debt is paid by the principal with money which he has furnished with directions to apply it to the debt.²

The Estate of a Surety paying the debt of the principal will have the same right of subrogation as the surety himself.³

(2) When Right Arises. — The right springs up at the time the suretyship is contracted,⁴ though it is not consummated until the debt is paid.⁵

(3) Rights as Against Third Persons. — A surety who pays the debt of his principal is entitled not only to all the equities of the creditor as against the principal, but also against all persons claiming under him,⁶ such as subsequent purchasers of the debtor's lands, with notice of his rights.⁷ And he may also be subrogated to the rights of the principal debtor against third persons.⁸

§. SURETY ENTITLED TO ALL SECURITIES APPLICABLE TO DEBT. — A surety paying the debt of his principal is entitled to the benefit of all securities for the debt which are held by the creditor⁹ or by his

Surety Entitled to Priority Over Intervening Liens. — As the surety's right of subrogation relates back to the time when the suretyship is contracted, it takes precedence over liens in favor of third parties arising after the assumption of the obligation by the surety although prior to the payment of the debt by him. *Prairie State Bank v. cosureties,¹ and may follow such securities in the hands of all persons chargeable with notice of his rights, even though he did not know of their existence or rely upon them at the time when he assumed the obligation.²

Creditor Not Allowed to Interfere with Surety's Rights.—The surety is entitled to actual possession of all collateral securities immediately on payment of the debt,³ and the creditor, after receiving payment, has no right to discharge or cancel any security without his consent,⁴ nor has he the right to burden the securities with subsequent debts owing to him by the principal debtor.⁵

The Surety Is Not Entitled to the Benefit of Any Other Securities or rights of the creditor than those applicable to the contract on which he is bound.⁶ Thus a surety for a part of a debt is not entitled to the benefit of a security given by the debtor to the creditor, at a different time, for another part of the debt.⁷

Right Not Defeated by Seizure by Another Creditor.—McMullen v. Ritchie, 64 Fed. Rep. 253.

Rule Not Applicable as Against Bona Fide Purchaser.—Sanders v. Reed, 12 N. H. 558.

Ignorance of Existence of Lien Immaterial.—One who executes a note as collateral security for a note secured by a lien on real estate will, if compelled to pay such collateral note, be subrogated to the lien in question, though he did not know of its existence when he made his note, and was informed of an assignment of the original note by the creditor to a third person. Hevener v. Berry, 17 W. Va. 474.

5. Creditor Not Allowed to Hypothecate Securities.—Schell City Bank v. Reed, 54 Mo. App. 94, holding that a surety on a mortgage debt need not pay off a subsequent mortgage, securing a distinct debt, in order to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor on the debt for which he was surety. The court explained, as based on the obsolete rule of tacking, a contrary statement of some of the text-writers and to the same effect see Holliday v. Brown, 33 Neb. 657.

Illustrations of Rule.—In Stafford v. New Bedford Five Cents Sav. Bank, 132 Mass. 315, a surety of a bankrupt corporation was held not entitled to the benefit of stock taken by the creditor, a bank, in a new corporation composed of the creditors of the old bankrupt corporation, such stock being in no manner collateral security for the indebtedness of the old corporation.

An undertaking to pay the holders of a note any deficiency not exceeding a given sum which may exist after exhausting certain collaterals furnished by an indorser of the note, creates a separate and independent responsibility, and gives the undertaker no right of subrogation to the benefit of the collaterals. Tracy v. Pomeroy, 120 Pa. St. 14.

7. Security Given for Another Part of Debt.—Wade v. Coope, 2 Sim. 155; Crump v. Mc-

c. WHEN RIGHT TO SUBROGATION BECOMES COMPLETE — (1) Full Satisfaction of Debt as a Condition Precedent. — The creditor is entitled to full satisfaction of the debt before the right of subrogation may be invoked; the surety may not meddle with any of his rights and securities so long as any portion of the debt remains unsatisfied.¹ As against the rights of the creditor payment of a part of the debt by the surety will not subrogate him to a proportionate part of the securities applicable to the debt.² Where a mortgage is given to secure several notes the surety is not entitled to subrogation until all of the notes are paid.³ It seems, however, that an exception will be made to the general rule when necessary to prevent a needless multiplicity of suits, no detriment resulting thereby to the creditor.⁴ Thus in Iowa it has been Surety for Part of Debt. — In Missouri it is held that a surety for the payment of part of the indebtedness of his principal, by paying that sum, becomes entitled to a proportionate share with the other creditors of the proceeds arising from the sale of the principal debtor's property, and for that purpose may be subrogated to all the rights of the remaining creditors so as to have the benefit of all the securities in their hands. Allison v. Sutherland, 50 Mo. 274.

3. Mortgage to Secure Several Notes. — Rice v. Morris, 82 Ind. 204; London, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 55 Minn. 71. And see Wilcox v. Fairhaven Bank, 7 Allen (Mass.) 270. But compare Schell City Bank v. Reed, 54 Mo. App. 94.

4. Exception to Prevent Multiplicity of Suits. — Where a father was guardian of his minor children, and after his death they brought suit against the sureties on his bond as guardian to recover a balance due them, it was decided that they being heirs of their father and liable for his debts to the extent of assets received from him, the sureties should be subrogated to their rights as wards and allowed to offset the one liability against the other. State v. Atkins, 53 Ark. 303. See also Rice v. Rice, 108 Ill. 199; Lusk v. Hopper, 3 Bush (Ky.) 179.

When the debt is due, the surety, even though he has not paid any part thereof, may sue the creditor and the principal debtor in equity to compel the debtor to pay the debt; held that a court of equity, in the exercise of its power to declare future rights and duties, may order that sureties who have not yet paid the demand of the creditor be subrogated to his rights when they shall have paid the debt of their principal.¹ And should the creditor permit the surety to resort to the right of subrogation before the debt has been entirely paid, neither the principal debtor nor any other creditor may complain.²

(2) What Constitutes Payment of Debt. — The creditor is entitled to actual payment of the debt.³ A tender of the amount accompanied with conditions will not suffice.⁴ But it is not necessary that the entire debt should be paid by the surety alone; part may be paid by the surety and part by the principal,⁵ or by cosureties.⁶ Nor is it necessary that the payment be in money; the note of the surety, though unpaid,⁷ or anything else that the creditor accepts as an equivalent and in satisfaction of the debt, will confer the right of subrogation.⁸

d. HOW FAR SUBROGATION WILL BE CARRIED — (1) Rights of Surety Measured by Right of Creditor. — The surety is entitled to all the rights of the person to whose place he is subrogated,⁹ but to no greater rights.¹⁰ and if he has paid part of the debt he may, in such a suit, be subrogated to the creditor's liens after satisfaction out of the debtor's property of the balance of the debt. Neal v. Buffington, 42 W. Va. 327.

In Moore v. Topliff, 107 Ill. 241, it was held that a surety against whom alone judgment had been obtained might, before paying the debt, file a bill bringing both the principal and the creditors into court, and obtain the benefit of a mortgage executed by the principal to secure the creditors. Compare Darst v. Bates, 51 Ill. 439; Conwell v. McGowan, 53 Ill. 363; Parkersburg First Nat. Bank v. Crawford, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. 125.

Signing of Note to Raise Money Not Payment. — A stay surety will not be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor merely by reason of the fact that he has signed a note, as surety, for the purpose of raising money to pay the judgment. Lichty v. Moore, 38 Neb. 269.

Surety Appointed Administrator of Creditor — Payment Presumed. — If a surety for a debt on which judgment has been obtained becomes administrator of the estate of the judgment creditor, he will be considered to have paid the judgment, and will be entitled to foreclose a

But It Is Otherwise where it does not appear that the note or other obligation was received by the creditor as payment, nor even that it was negotiable, so that a presumption might arise that it was received as payment. In such case the right of subrogation will not arise until payment of the obligation. Hoover v. Epler, 52 Pa. St. 522; Combs v. Candler, 95 Va. 7.

A Surety Paying a Note Which Provides for Attorney's Fees in case suit is brought is entitled to collect such fees from his principal, even though he paid the note without being sued thereon. Beville v. Boyd, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 491; Carpenter v. Minter, 72 Tex. 370. But to the contrary see Cleveland v. Carr, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 406.

10. Surety's Rights No Greater than Those of Creditor. — Heth Tp. v. Lewis, 114 Ind. 508;

(2) Debt Compromised or Paid in Depreciated Currency. — Indemnification and not profit is the measure of the surety's recourse against his principal; he will not be permitted to speculate in the obligations of his principal.¹ Accordingly, if he compromises with the creditor and settles the debt by payment of a part,² or pays it in depreciated currency, warrants, or notes of banks or other institutions, the general rule is that he will be entitled to claim from the principal only the actual amount paid.³ And in the cases of depreciated currency, warrants, and notes, it will be assumed that he paid only what is shown to be their market value, unless he proves the contrary.⁴

(3) Rule Where Set-off Is Granted to Surety. — Where the sureties in an action by the creditor against them plead and have allowed a set-off to a part of his claim, their right of subrogation will not be limited to the amount of the judgment against them for the balance, but will extend to the whole amount of the creditor's claim.⁵

c. WHETHER PAYMENT BY SURETY EXTINGUISHES SPECIALTY — (1) Rule in England. — According to the early English rule a bond or other specialty or a judgment is not extinguished by the payment thereof by the surety, but is in equity preserved for his benefit and protection.⁶ But by a later rule in England the security was deemed ipso facto extinguished by the act of payment, thereby preventing the subrogation of the surety thereto; the claim of the latter against the principal being deemed a mere assumpsit for money paid to his use and benefit.⁷ At present, however, the early rule again prevails by force of act of Parliament.⁸

(2) Civil-law Rule. — The principle of the civil law is absolute and unrestricted substitution; by that law, the debt in favor of the surety is treated not as a paid, extinguished debt, but as sold to him — all its original obligatory force continuing against the principal.⁹

(3) Rule in United States. — In the United States the decided preponderance of judicial opinion favors the view that the security is not extinguished, but is kept alive for the benefit of the surety in equity.¹⁰ And this rule seems to be more in consonance with the general principles of equitable subrogation than the rule which declares that the debt is extinguished by payment on the part of the surety. legal benefits built upon it in the form of liens, ought not to be considered as annihilated if the purposes of equity and justice require the contrary; and where the intention with which the payment is made requires that the security should survive, either generally or against particular persons, and the situation and relations of the parties will fairly admit it, a court of equity will generally, in this country, respect the intention, and treat the security as in being to the end designed, and recognize and enforce the right of subrogation."¹ But the specialty or judgment is kept alive in equity only, and not at law, unless otherwise provided by statute.²

Various Views as to Assignment of Judgment. — In some of the states it is held that a surety on paying a judgment is entitled to an assignment thereof,³ and that, having taken such assignment, either to himself or to a third person, he may enforce the judgment against his principal.⁴ In others it is held that

In Alabama by Statute (Code, § 3157) a surety who has paid a judgment rendered against his principal and himself, and taken an assignment of it to himself, may enforce such judgment against his principal. Bragg v. Patterson, 85 Ala. 233. But the assignment, to confer the statutory right, must be in writing, made by the plaintiff in the judgment or his agent or attorney of record. Blackman v. Joiner, 81 Ala. 344. And the statute, being in derogation of the principles of the common law, must be strictly construed as to the rights created by it. Vanderveer v. Ware, 65 Ala. 606.

no assignment is necessary. The surety is considered on equitable principles as entitled to an assignment, and equity will consider that as done which ought to have been done, and, if necessary for his protection, will decree an assignment to be made.¹ In others still the assignment must be made to a third person, an assignment to the surety himself extinguishing the original obligation.²

Judgment or Specialty Extinguished by Payment.—In a few jurisdictions it is held that payment of a judgment or other specialty by a surety extinguishes the same, and remits the surety to his remedy as a simple contract creditor.³

Joint Judgment Against Several Defendants.—In some jurisdictions where a joint judgment is rendered against several defendants subrogation is not enforceable until the question of suretyship has been determined in a judicial proceeding.⁴

Judgment Paid with Money of Third Person.—A judgment which is paid with the money of a third person, without any agreement that the security shall be assigned or kept on foot for his benefit, is absolutely extinguished.⁵

f. SUBROGATION TO RIGHT OF SET-OFF.—Any right of set-off accruing to the principal may be availed of by the surety, if it grows out of the transacthe right of a surety who has taken an assignment of a judgment against himself and his principal to revive such judgment when it has become dormant, see Harper v. Kemble, 65 Mo. App. 514; Neal v. Nash, 23 Ohio St. 483; Peters v. McWilliams, 36 Ohio St. 155.

The Only Modification of the Rule in North Carolina is in favor of a surety who has paid the debt of a deceased principal. Liles v. Rogers, 113 N. Car. 197, 37 Am. St. Rep. 627.

In Illinois a surety on paying a judgment may have the same assigned to a third person to be kept alive for his benefit. Katz v. Moessinger, 110 Ill. 372; Chandler v. Higgins, 109 Ill. 602; Rice v. Rice, 108 Ill. 199; Allen v. Powell, 108 Ill. 584. Or he may treat the judgment as satisfied and discharged and resort to an action against his principal, and in the event of his choosing the latter course it is immaterial that there is a formal assignment of the judgment which he had procured to be made. Notwithstanding such assignment the surety may still treat the judgment as discharged and resort to his action. Katz v. Moessinger, 110 Ill. 372.

tion in respect to which his obligation was assumed;¹ but it is otherwise if it grows out of a separate transaction.² But the "separate transaction" rule does not apply if the principal has availed himself of the set-off in a joint action against himself and the surety.³ This privilege has been held not to extend to equitable defenses accruing to the principal by reason of the creditor's breach of contract — e. g., a vendor's breach of his contract to convey good title.⁴

g. WHEN SURETY IS NOT SUBROGATED — (1) Debt Paid by Principal Debtor. — No right of subrogation arises in favor of the surety where the debt is paid by the principal debtor himself.⁵

(2) Surety Indebted to Principal. — If the surety is himself indebted to the principal, neither he nor his creditor will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the principal, so long as such indebtedness exists;⁶ but the principal will not be permitted to collect the debt, without first indemnifying the surety, especially if he is shown to be insolvent.⁷

The Principal May Set Off a Subsequent Liability to him on the part of the surety, against the surety's demand for subrogation; as, when the principal afterwards becomes surety for his surety and as such discharges a liability of the latter. Harrington v. Fulton, 5 Del. Ch. 492.

But the surety's right of subrogation will not be affected by the fact that the principal has become surety on a note of the surety which was given only for the purpose of raising money to pay the original principal's debt. Owen's Appeal, 11 W. N. C. (Pa.) 488.

7. Principal Required to Indemnify Surety. — Abbey v. Van Campen, Freem. (Miss.) 273; Mattingly v. Sutton, 19 W. Va. 19.

Surety's Liability Available as Counterclaim. — In Walker v. Dicks, 80 N. Car. 263, it was held that a surety, before he has suffered from his suretyship, may use his liability as such as an equitable counterclaim against a debt due from him to his insolvent principal. And this defense will avail him equally against an assignee of the note past due when assigned, or assigned with notice. See also Scott v. Timberlake, 83 N. Car. 382; Dorsheimer v. Bucher, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 9.

tarily paid a debt of his principal which he could not have been compelled to pay, either because of his prior release from the obligation of suretyship,¹ or because of the bar of the statute of limitations, will not be entitled to subrogation.² Nor will the right be extended to a party who pays a debt for which he supposes himself to be liable as surety, when in fact he is under no legal obligation to pay.³ But the right exists even though the debt paid by the surety was barred by limitation as against the principal, provided it constituted a valid obligation against the surety.⁴

(4) Subrogation Unnecessary for Protection of Surety. — It has been held that a surety will not be subrogated to the rights of the creditor, unless necessary for his protection.⁵

(5) No Subrogation Against Rights Prior to Obligation of Suretyship. — Subrogation will not be enforced in favor of a surety so as to defeat an interest acquired and held by a third party, when that interest, though subordinate to that of the creditor, is prior in date to the surety's undertaking.⁶

h. VARIOUS INSTANCES OF SURETYSHIP — (1) Sureties of Decedents, Bankrupts, and Corporations. — A surety of a decedent who pays a claim against the estate of his principal is subrogated to the rights of the creditor.⁷

A surety of a bankrupt will be substituted in the place of a creditor of the bankrupt whose claim he has satisfied.⁸

Not Necessary that Payment Be Enforced by Execution. — Provided the debt paid was enforceable, the surety is entitled to subrogation even though execution was not issued against him. McNeilly v. Cooksey, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 39.

Debt Paid at Express Request of Principal. — A surety who pays the debt of his principal at the express request of the latter will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor even though it turns out that the obligation could not have been enforced against him. Lyth v. Green, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 300.

2. Payment of Debt Barred by Limitation. — Hatchett v. Pegram, 21 La. Ann. 722; Randolph v. Randolph, 3 Rand. (Va.) 490.

3. Belief of Surety as to Liability. — Dawson v. Lee, 83 Ky. 49; Bancroft v. Abbott, 3 Allen (Mass.) 524; State Bank v. Napier, 46 N. Y. App. Div. 406.

Where the Mistake Is One of Fact and not of law, the rule stated in the text does not apply, unless it should appear that the party had the means of correct information within his power, but negligently omitted to avail himself of them. Accordingly, where one, in the belief that he was surety on the bond of an administrator, settled with the next of kin, who were under the same impression, the administrator being insolvent, he was adjudged entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the next of kin against the real sureties on the bond. Copehart v. Mhoon, 5 Jones Eq. (58 N. Car.) 178; State Bank v. Napier, 46 N. Y. App. Div. 406.

Surety Entitled to Benefit of Steps Taken by Creditor to Collect. — In Brought v. Griffith, 16 Iowa 26, it was held that a surety who pays the debt upon which he is liable, after the creditor has "stated, sworn to, and filed the same" as a claim against the estate of the deceased principal debtor, as required by Rev. Stat. of Iowa, § 2393, stands in the place of the creditor as to the steps already taken to enforce the claims against the estate, and is subrogated to his right to prosecute the same to an allowance and to demand payment of the administrator in the class in which it was placed by the original filing.

8. Subrogation of Surety of Bankrupt. — Watkins v. Worthington, 2 Bland (Md.) 509. See also the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, vol. 16, p. 682.

Repayment of Unlawful Preference a Condition Precedent. — An accommodation maker, indorser, or surety on the obligations of a bankrupt, who pays them and takes them up after the principal debtor has given a preference thereon to their original holder, cannot present an allowable claim against the estate of the bankrupt, either for the amount owing by him upon the obligations or for the amount that the surety paid to take them up, unless the amount paid to give the preference is first returned to the estate of the bankrupt. Swartz v. Siegel, (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. Rep. 13. And see infra, this title, XIV. Enforcement of Right — Claimant Required to Do Equity.

Sureties of Corporations. — Directors of a corporation, who have become its sureties to creditors, will, on insolvency, be subrogated to the rights of the creditors.¹

(2) Sureties of Fiduciaries. — The sureties of a fiduciary who are compelled to satisfy a liability occasioned by his default, devastavit, or breach of trust, will be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the cestuis que trustent, creditors, or other beneficiaries, against the fiduciary and those participating in the default, devastavit, or breach of trust.² This rule is, perhaps, most frequently applied in favor of sureties on the bonds of defaulting administrators;³ but it is equally applicable in favor of the sureties of guardians,⁴ receivers,⁵ and all other persons occupying a fiduciary relation.⁶

Subrogation of Surety to Rights of Fiduciary. — Where a trustee bona fide incurs expense, or pays out money in behalf of the trust fund to realize on the same, and the surety has to make good the expenditure, the latter is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the trustee to reimbursement out of the trust fund.⁷ So where an executor has a claim against the estate of his testator for commission, a surety on his bond, who is compelled to answer for his default, will be subrogated to such claim.⁸

Payment by Surety as a Condition Precedent. — Although the general rule is that the right to subrogation does not arise until the default of the principal has

One of Two Sureties on an Administration Bond Who Pays One-half of a debt recovered against the insolvent administrator will not be subrogated to the rights of the creditor whose debt he has discharged, but to the rights of the administrator for whom the debt was paid. Clark v. Williams, 70 N. Car. 679.

When Not Subrogated. — A surety of an administrator who has been compelled to pay a judgment recovered on his bond by the heirs cannot maintain a suit in equity against an agent of the administrator who has moneys belonging to the estate in his hands, since the remedy of the heirs themselves, in such a case, is limited to an action at law. Winslow v. Otis, 5 Gray (Mass.) 360.

4. Sureties of Guardians. — State v. Atkins, 53 Ark. 303; Gilbert v. Neely, 35 Ark. 25; McNeil v. Morrow, Rich. Eq. Cas. (S. Car.) 172.

Subrogation to Right to Enforce Resulting Trust. — The surety of a guardian who is compelled to make good to the ward or his personal representative the defalcation of his principal, will, in equity, be subrogated to the ward's right to enforce a resulting trust against the guardian, arising out of the purchase by, the latter of land with the funds of the ward, and may have such lands sold for his reimbursement. Rice v. Rice, 108 Ill. 199.

When Not Subrogated. — A surety on the bond of a guardian, who has been held liable for the default of his principal, is not entitled to a dividend from the assignee of the guardian under an assignment for benefit of creditors, where such assignment was made before the default by the guardian occurred. Church's Petition, 16 R. I. 231.

5. Sureties of Receivers. — Clark v. Harrisonville First Nat. Bank, 57 Mo. App. 277.

6. A Surety on the Bond of an Assignee for the Benefit of Creditors who has been held liable for a devastavit by his principal is subrogated to the rights of the latter and of creditors against a third party who has participated in such devastavit. Wheeler v. Hawkins, 116 Ind. 515.

The Sureties of a Bank Cashier who have been compelled to make good a loss caused by stock-gambling transactions of their principal will be subrogated to the rights of the bank against the broker responsible for the loss. Mendel v. Boyd, (Neb. 1902) 91 N. W. Rep. 860.

7. Surety Subrogated to Rights of Trustee. — Boyd v. Myers, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 175.

The Surety of an Administrator who pays a debt of the intestate which the administrator had become bound to pay, is entitled to the same lien on the estate which the administrator would have had, had he paid the debt. Gowing v. Bland, 2 How. (Miss.) 813.

A Surety for the Trustees of a Church on their note for the payment of money advanced to build the church, who pays the obligation of the trustees, is entitled to be subrogated to their rights to enforce payment of the debt against the church. Bushong v. Taylor, 82 Mo. 660.

been made good, yet it seems that if he is insolvent, or there has been fraud, subrogation will be enforced before payment.¹

Voluntary Payment by Surety. — It has been held that when the surety is bound to make good money owing by the guardian on his bond, he need not wait until judgment or execution, but may pay at once and succeed to all the securities of the creditors or beneficiaries in the bond, and also to all the securities in the hands of his cosureties, though they were intended for the latter's indemnification alone, unless he consented that they might be given to his exclusion. But in such a case the surety, by paying voluntarily, undertakes the burden of establishing the fact of his obligation to pay.²

(3) Sureties on Official Bonds — (a) In General. — Sureties on bonds of government officials, on being compelled to make good the default of their principal, will be subrogated to the position of the government, in respect of all its securities, liens, and priorities, for the purpose of enforcing reimbursement from their principal,³ or contribution from their cosureties.⁴ And it is immaterial how the government's right of priority originated — whether out of common-law prerogative, positive statute, or contract; once established that it is entitled to rank as a preferred creditor, the same preference will be upheld by way of subrogation for the benefit of the surety.⁵

Where the Consideration of the Contract of Suretyship Is Illegal the sureties are not entitled to subrogation.⁶

(b) Sureties of State or County Treasurer. — In accordance with the general principles already stated, sureties on the bonds of state⁷ or county treasurers who are held liable for the defaults of their principals are subrogated to the rights of the state or county against such principals, and against all persons participating in their misfeasance.⁸

(c) Sureties of Tax Collector. — The sureties of a tax collector, on being compelled to make good a loss arising from the misappropriation of tax money by the collector, are entitled to be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the government against their principal;⁹ and they may follow the money in the hands of all persons who have received it with knowledge of its true

Measure of Recovery. — In Pennsylvania, a surety on the bond of a county treasurer, upon being compelled to make good the default of his principal, will be subrogated to the rights of the county upon the bond, and without any formal order of substitution may claim thereon a dividend out of the assigned estate of the treasurer. In such a case the dividend is to be awarded, not upon the penalty named in the bond, but upon the amount the surety has been compelled to pay; the latter being the real debt. Boltz's Estate, 133 Pa. 9. Sureties of Tax Collector. — Schuessler v. Dudley, 80 Ala. 547, 60 Am. Rep. 124; Irby v. Livingston, 81 Ga. 281; Hook v. Richeson, character.¹ In some jurisdictions, sureties of tax collectors on making good the default of their principal arising from his failure to collect taxes are held to be entitled to subrogation to the rights and remedies of the government against the derelict taxpayers,² while in other jurisdictions this right is denied.³

(a) Sureties of Sheriff. — As a general rule sureties on the official bond of a sheriff who have been obliged to answer for the default of their principal are entitled to relief by subrogation.⁴ Thus where they pay a judgment against the sheriff for an erroneous seizure of property they will be subrogated to his rights in respect to any indemnity which he may have demanded and received from the judgment creditor,⁵ and also to the rights of the owner of the property seized against the party in whose favor the seizure was made.⁶ If they are obliged to pay a judgment on account of the failure of the sheriff to return a writ or make collection of a debt, they are entitled to be subrogated to the lien of the judgment creditor.⁷ If held liable for his failure to pay over money collected on execution, they are subrogated to the rights of the execution plaintiff both against the sheriff and the execution defendant.⁸ And sureties of a sheriff who are held liable for the default of a deputy will be subrogated to all the rights of their principal against such deputy and his sureties.⁹

(4) Sureties of Vendee and Vendor of Lands or Chattels. — (a) Sureties of Vendee. — A surety for the purchase price of land has a right to be subrogated to the lien of the vendor on the land, on being compelled to discharge the obligation of his principal.¹⁰ So, sureties for the purchase price of land sold

It Is No Defense that the party receiving the money received it in payment for property sold, if at the time he had notice, actual or constructive, of the character of the money; but a bona fide seller for a valuable consideration without notice, actual or constructive, is entitled to full protection. *Brown v. In Mississippi, by Statute, where a sheriff fails to make due return of an execution, and the plaintiff moves against him and his sureties and obtains judgment, and recovers from him the amount thereof, he is entitled to sue out a new execution on the original judgment and collect the money for his own use; but the statute does not authorize the sureties of the sheriff who have paid money for him, he being dead, to pursue the same course. Dillon v. Cook, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 773.

Technical Failure to Return Writ. — Sureties Not Subrogated. — Where a sheriff has collected money under legal process and has properly applied it to the satisfaction of the writ, his sureties have no right of subrogation even though they are compelled to answer for his default in failing to return the writ. Wright v. Fitzgerald, 17 Ohio St. 635.

under a decree of a court of equity, where the title is retained until the purchase price is paid, are entitled, on the insolvency of their principal, before payment of the debt, to enjoin the conveyance of the land and to have it applied to their relief, even though the purchaser has assigned his interest therein to a third person.¹ And where a judgment is recovered for the purchase price of land a surety of the vendee, on paying such judgment, is subrogated to the lien thereof against all land owned by his principal in the county where the judgment is docketed, including the land purchased.²

Rights as Against Subsequent Purchasers.—A surety for the purchase price of land cannot assert his right to subrogation as against a subpurchaser of part of the tract, when the purchase money paid by the latter has been applied in partial payment of the note on which the surety was bound.³ It seems, however, that the surety may be subrogated to the right of the vendor to maintain an action against a subsequent purchaser of the property, to rescind the sale as simulated and fraudulent, although made before payment by him of the principal's debt.⁴

Where the Vendor Retains No Lien the doctrine of subrogation is, of course, inapplicable.⁵

Lien Refused to Vendor—Res. Judicata as Against Surety.—Where a surety pays a judgment on a purchase-money note, obtained by the vendor against himself and principal, but in the suit the court refuses to decree a vendor's lien on the land, he may not subsequently claim to be entitled to such a lien by subrogation to the rights of the vendor; being a party to the action in which the vendor was refused a lien, principal, be subrogated to the equitable rights of the vendee as against a subsequent purchaser of the land at a sheriff's sale against the insolvent vendor.¹

(5) Surety of Surety. — The sureties of a surety and also the assignees of a surety are entitled, precisely as the original surety, to be substituted in the place of the creditor as to all the latter's remedies against the principal debtor or his estate.² But the surety of a surety, though compelled to pay the creditor, is not entitled to be substituted to the latter's position for the purpose of enforcing payment against the principal debtor if the latter has paid the immediate surety.³

(6) Cosureties. — A surety who is compelled to pay the debt of his principal is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the creditor as against his cosureties⁴ or against another party who has assumed the payment of the debt, in precisely the same manner as against the principal debtor,⁵ unless subrogation would work injustice to intervening creditors.⁶ But the extent of this right will be regulated by what he actually pays; he may not speculate in the common debt to the disadvantage of his principal. Accordingly, the cosureties will be entitled to the benefit of any compromise effected by the paying surety, or any discount that he has obtained by paying the common debt in depreciated currency, notes of banks, or the like.⁷

(7) Successive Sureties. — A surety on paying the debt of his principal will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against a subsequent surety.⁸ So, a surety on a second bond for the same debt will, on paying the first bond and taking an assignment thereof, be substituted to the rights of the obligee in the first bond against the estate of the deceased obligor.⁹ But a surety is not entitled to subrogation against a subsequent guarantor of the principal debtor.¹⁰

the debt of his principal is entitled to subrogation, applies in favor of a wife who has become surety for the debt of her husband.¹ A wife who joins with her husband in a mortgage of her own property to secure his debts occupies the position of a surety² and is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against her husband's property.³ If she joins in a mortgage relinquishing her dower in her husband's estate, she will, on redeeming the mortgage with her own means, be subrogated to the benefits thereof, as against intervening lien creditors.⁴

delivery bonds.¹ But where two joint obligors are sued and one of them gives bail, such bail cannot, on being compelled to pay the debt, maintain an action against the other obligor for money paid, there being no privity between the bail of one obligor and his co-obligor.²

(b) Subrogation as Between Successive Sureties. — The general rule is, that one who becomes a surety in the course of legal proceedings against the principal, for the benefit of the latter alone, without the assent or sanction of the surety on the obligation in suit, will not be subrogated to the rights and remedies of the creditor against the prior surety; on the contrary, he is entitled to stand in the creditor's place only as to the latter's rights against the principal; as to any prior interest in the property which may be under pledge, he must occupy the place of the debtor.³ There are, however, a few decisions which seem to run counter to this rule;⁴ and it is clear that it does not apply where the subsequent surety becomes bound for a purpose in which both the principal and the prior surety have an interest, and the assent of the prior surety is expressly given or may be clearly inferred from the circumstances of the case.⁵ On the other hand, the weight of authority is that where the prior

Subrogation Will Not Be Enforced in favor of one apparently a joint principal, but really a surety, to the prejudice of an intervening security taken by a creditor from the principal, bona fide, and in ignorance of the suretyship.¹ Nor will a copromisor who pays a debt barred by the statute of limitations, against the consent of his codebtor, be subrogated as against the latter.²

(b) Tenants in Common. — If one of several tenants in common pays off a lien binding the common property, there will be no merger of his demand, but he will be considered a surety for his cotenants, and subrogated to the rights of the creditor against them for their proportion of the debt.³ Thus where several persons are interested in land encumbered by a mortgage, whether as tenants in common of the whole or as owners of distinct parcels, and one of them redeems for the protection of his own interest, he becomes substituted in equity to the rights of the mortgagee.⁴ And one of two joint purchasers of land, who pays more than his share of the purchase money, will be subrogated to the rights of the vendor as against a subsequent purchaser from the other vendee with notice.⁵

The Lien Discharged Must Be an Actual Existing Incumbrance, and not a limited or inchoate one, in order to entitle the tenant discharging it to subrogation against his cotenant.⁶

(c) Partners. — Mere payment of a partnership debt by one partner does not entitle him to subrogation as against his copartners.⁷ But such subrogation

Vendor's Lien Barred by Lapse of Time. — Where one joint tenant discharges a vendor's lien for a balance of purchase money due on the land, after that lien has become barred by lapse of time, he will have no recourse against the other tenant by substitution to the rights of the vendor. Screven v. Joyner, 1 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 252, 26 Am. Dec. 199. See also Ellicott v. Nichols, 7 Gill (Md.) 85, 48 Am. Dec. 546, a decision based on the same principle.

7. Subrogation Between Partners. — Baily v. Brownfield, 20 Pa. St. 45.

The Reason Why Subrogation Is Not Allowed to one partner as against his copartner, or to will be allowed where a partner, after dissolution of the partnership, pays a firm debt out of his private means;¹ or where one partner is compelled to pay a debt which his copartner has agreed to pay;² or where a partner who has retired from a firm, and has been indemnified by the remaining partners against all partnership debts, is subsequently compelled to pay such a debt. In such a case the retiring partner is considered a surety for his former copartners.³

Loan to Surviving Partner to Pay Firm Debts. — One who in good faith lends money to a surviving partner, which is faithfully applied by the latter in satisfaction of the firm liabilities, will be subrogated to the rights of the partner to have the loan repaid out of the firm assets.⁴

A Purchaser of the Property of a Firm who assumes the firm debts succeeds to the rights of the firm against a deceased member thereof who has misappropriated firm property.⁵

Adjustment of Partnership Accounts a Condition Precedent. — As a general rule there must be an adjustment of the partnership accounts, and of the equities between the partners, before subrogation will be enforced.⁶

(11) Sureties on Obligations to Government — (a) In General. — Sureties on bonds and other obligations to a state will, as a general rule, on paying the debt of their principal be subrogated to the rights of the state.⁷

one merely a joint debtor as against his co-debtor, is because that, as between them, there is no obligation to pay the debt resting upon one superior to that which rests upon the other." Per Strong, J., in McCormick v. Irwin, 35 Pa. St. 111. And see In re Hoge, 188 Pa. St. 527. But see supra, this subsection, (a) Codebtors.

Right of Subrogation Conferred by Statute. — A partner paying off a judgment against the individuals of the firm for money borrowed by them in their individual names, but for use in the firm business, out of his private means, is entitled to the benefit of a statute giving a debtor who pays off a judgment against himself and his codebtors the right to issue execution on such judgment against the latter for reimbursement. O'Bryan v. Neel, 84 Ga. 134; Pearce v. Chastain, 3 Ga. 226, 46 Am. Dec. 423. And under the statute of Indiana subrogation will be enforced in favor of a surviving partner who has paid joint judgments against himself and the estate of a deceased partner. Harter v. Songer, 138 Ind. 161.

Fraudulent Conveyance Executed by Copartner Vacated. — Where a partner pays judgments obtained by the firm creditors on claims which by an award were to be settled by his copartner, the former is entitled to be subrogated to the position of the creditors, and may maintain a bill to vacate a fraudulent conveyance executed by the copartner. Swan v. Smith, 57 Miss. 548.

7. A Surety for a Bank Which Is a Depository of State Funds, on being compelled to pay a judgment against him on the bond, will be subrogated to the rights of the state against assets of the bank in the hands of its receiver. Cullinan v. Union Surety, etc., Co., 79 N. Y. App. Div. 409.

A Surety on a Liquor Dealer's Bond, upon payment of a judgment thereon, will be subrogated to the rights of the state against the undisclosed principal in the bond, and may maintain

The Subrogation of Persons Paying Taxes and Customs Duties to the rights of the government is discussed in a subsequent part of this article.⁴

(b) Bail in Criminal Cases. — While bail in criminal cases may be subrogated to the means of enforcing the performance of that which the recognizance of bail is intended to secure the performance of, they are not entitled to be subrogated to the peculiar remedies which the government may possess for collecting the penalty; to allow the latter would be to aid the bail to get rid of their obligation and to relieve them from the motives to exert themselves in securing the appearance of the principal.⁵ Nor does the statute entitling sureties on bonds given to the federal government to subrogation to the government's priority embrace recognizances in criminal cases.⁶ So in England, while the sureties of a crown debtor for customs and other civil duties, on paying the debt of their principal, are entitled to have the benefit of prerogative process to aid them in coercing payment from the principal and compelling contribution from their cosureties,⁷ the rule is confined to such cases, and it is not applied in favor of bail in criminal proceedings; indeed, it has even been held that the law raises no liability on the part of the principal to indemnify his bail for what they have been compelled to pay on their recognizance by reason of his default.⁸

(12) Underwriters of Loans. — Underwriters of a loan who have been compelled to pay the same will be subrogated to the rights of the lender against the borrower and his sureties.⁹

2. Subrogation of Guarantors. — A guarantor, on payment of the debt guaranteed, will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against his principal,⁷ and his coguarantors.⁸ And when the guaranty of a bond is executed at the solicitation of the obligee therein, his assignee, who has by suit and judgment fixed the guarantor's liability, will not be permitted to defeat the latter's claim to subrogation on the ground that he assumed the obligation without the request of the principal debtor.⁹

The Guarantor of a Promissory Note occupies the position of a surety, and will be subrogated to the rights of the holder to whom he has been compelled to make payment.¹⁰ If the note be secured by mortgage, and the guaranty be an action against him for its breach. City Trust, etc., Co. v. American Brewing Co., 70 N. Y. App. Div. 511. See also Kane v. State, 78 Ind. 103. But see Knoll v. Marshall County, 114 Iowa 647, for a case in which subrogation was refused to sureties upon the bond of a saloon-keeper.

2. Subrogation of Bail in Criminal Cases. — U. S. v. Ryder, 110 U. S. 729.

3. U. S. v. Ryder, 110 U. S. 729. In this case it was held further, that even if the bail were entitled under the act (§ 3468, U. S. Rev. Stat.) to the same priority which the federal government has, they are not entitled to use the name of the United States in prosecuting their claim. The statute expressly declares that they must sue in their own names. The reason is obvious. The government has many advantages in proceeding which are not possessed by individuals, and is not liable for costs, and individuals prosecuting claims against other individuals ought not to have the advantage of the name and prestige of the United States. And to the same effect see U. S. v. Preston, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 446.

3. Subrogation of Parties to Negotiable Instruments—a. INDORSERS OF BILLS AND NOTES.—An indorser who pays a bill or note to the holder thereof will be subrogated to all the rights of the holder against antecedent parties,² including the benefit of all securities given for its payment.³ And if he pays a judgment on the instrument he will, in most jurisdictions, be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor.⁴ In general, the acceptor for value of a bill of exchange is the principal debtor and the other parties thereto are sureties for him; accordingly, on payment by an indorser, he is entitled to exoneration from such acceptor, and to be subrogated to the benefit of securities deposited by the latter with the holder.⁵

Rule Where Paper Is Overdue or Indorser Takes with Notice.—An indorser's right to subrogation will not be affected by the fact that he acquired the paper when overdue, or took it with notice of equities between prior parties, if he himself took from a bona fide purchaser for value before maturity and without notice of any such equities.⁶

One Who Becomes Accommodation Indorser for Two Joint Makers of a promissory note at the request of only one of them, on being compelled to pay, will be subrogated to the rights of the original creditor, and may maintain suit against the other maker, as both of them presumptively stand to him as principals.¹

Joint Indorsers. — It has been held that joint indorsers of negotiable paper are liable as copromisors, and as such have no rights of subrogation against each other.²

Payment a Condition Precedent to Subrogation. — As a general rule an indorser may not claim to be subrogated to the rights of the holder, in securities held by the latter, until he has paid the note.³

b. ACCOMMODATION ACCEPTOR OF BILL. — The rule in regard to an accommodation acceptor may be stated thus: at law he is regarded as the principal debtor, in favor of a bona fide holder, but as between himself and the drawer he, in equity, occupies the position of a surety, and, on payment of the bill, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the holder in respect of any securities received by the latter from the drawer.⁴

c. VOLUNTEER PAYING PROTESTED BILL FOR HONOR OF PARTY THERETO. — An exception to the rule that a volunteer is not entitled to subrogation is made in the interest of commerce in favor of one who pays a protested bill of exchange for the honor of the drawer or other party thereto; in such case the payor will be subrogated to the rights of the holder against those for whose honor payment was made.⁵ But a stranger who takes up a note at or after maturity, with nothing to show an intent to purchase, thereby satisfies the note, and may not claim to be subrogated to the rights of the person to whom he made payment, against prior parties.⁶

Payment of Interest. — In Telford v. Garrels, 132 Ill. 550, it was held that where an indorser of notes secured by a trust deed pays to the assignee interest on the notes in discharge of his agreement and liability to the latter, he will be subrogated to the security of the deed, and may, on bill to foreclose by the holder of the notes, by his cross-bill, have decree for the interest so paid, as against the original debtor or mortgagor.

receipt or bill of lading for the merchandise, will be subrogated to the rights of the indorser against the consignee;⁴ and a bank discounting the note of another bank, indorsed for accommodation by its directors, will be entitled to the benefit of collaterals provided for the security of such indorsers.⁵

Note Assigned Several Times — Last Assignor Insolvent. — Where a note has been assigned several times and the last assignor is insolvent, or a nonresident, but his assignor is a resident, the last assignee may be subrogated to the rights of his assignor to have recourse against a prior assignor.⁶

First Indorser Discharged by Negligence of Holder. — It seems that if the first indorser has been discharged from his liability on the note, by reason of the negligence of the holder in not giving him due notice of dishonor, no subsequent party to the paper may claim to be subrogated to the benefit of securities executed for his indemnity.⁴

g. ASSIGNEE OF PURCHASE-MONEY NOTES. — Where the assignee of unpaid purchase-money notes receives from the original vendor in an executory contract for the sale of land, a transfer of his superior title which exists until the contract of sale is consummated by complete payment, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original vendor, and may enforce his rights by a sale of the land, in default of payment, though a note be barred by limitation.⁵ But if the vendor of land conveys it to the vendee by deed, receiving his note for the purchase price, an assignee will not, by the mere assignment of the note, be subrogated to the vendor's lien on the land to enforce payment of the note.⁶

III. SUBROGATION OF CREDITORS — 1. Subrogation to Securities Given to Surety. — As a general rule a creditor is entitled in equity to the benefit of all collateral securities which the debtor has given to his sureties or to persons standing in the situation of sureties;⁷ though there are some authorities which hold that this rule does not apply to securities which are given for the sole purpose of indemnifying the surety, and not for the purpose of creating a security for the debt, or of providing means for its payment.¹

Where There Are a Number of Creditors the securities will enure to their benefit in proportion to the amounts of their respective claims.²

Rule Where Surety Is Also a Creditor.—If the security be to indemnify the surety, and also to secure to him an absolute debt, it will be applied to both debts pro rata.³

Principal Debt Barred by Limitations.—It seems that the right here considered exists in favor of the creditor even though his remedy against the surety on the principal debt is barred by the statute of limitations.⁴

Right of Surety to Release Securities.—The surety cannot defeat the rights of the creditor by appropriating the property pledged to his own use, without satisfying the debt;¹ nor has he any right to release the securities against the consent of the creditor.²

Rights of Creditor Measured by Rights of Surety. — The rights acquired by the creditor cannot extend beyond those of the surety in whose place he is substituted.³

Recovery of Judgment as a Condition Precedent. — In some jurisdictions the creditor's right of subrogation to securities held by sureties cannot be enforced until he has recovered judgment on his claim.⁴

When Creditor Will Not Be Subrogated. — A creditor will not be subrogated to securities taken by a surety with whom he is not in privity,⁵ or to securities given by a surety to his cosurety,⁶ or to securities given by a stranger with whom he is not in privity,⁷ or to a fund given to the surety by the principal debtor with directions to apply it to the debt.⁸ Nor does the right of subrogation here considered arise where the securities taken by the surety are void⁹ or unenforceable as against subsequent incumbrancers.¹⁰

2. Subrogation to Rights of Debtor Against Third Persons. — A creditor may be subrogated to the rights of his debtor against a third person who is, in equity and good conscience, ultimately liable for the debt.¹² Thus where a judgment debtor fraudulently conveys property to his wife the creditor will be subrogated to the benefit of a note for the purchase money given by an innocent purchaser of the land from the wife.¹³

Creditor Not Subrogated to Rights of Debtor Against Tortfeasor. — A creditor whose means of recovery against the debtor have been destroyed or impaired by the tort of a third person,¹⁴ or whose obligations as a contractor have been increased by such tort, cannot be subrogated to the rights of the debtor against the wrongdoer.¹⁵ Nor can the creditor have the benefit of any indemnity which the wrongdoer may have taken for any liability which he might incur by reason of the tort.¹⁶

IV. PERSONS INTERESTED IN ENCUMBERED ESTATES — 1. In General. — The general rule is that any person having an interest in property on which there is a lien or encumbrance may, if necessary for his own protection, pay off the same and be substituted to the rights and remedies of the holder thereof.¹⁷

Execution Defendant Paying Execution to Release Lien on Land.—In Harvey v. Warren, 31 Neb. 155, the sheriff collected the amount of an execution, marked the judgment "satisfied," but failed to return the same or to pay the money into court or to the creditor. Subsequently, to release the lien upon his land, the plaintiff paid the creditor the amount of the judgment and costs, and instituted an action against the sheriff and his surety to recover the money so paid by him. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor, and could recover from the sheriff and the surety.

2. Married Woman Paying Off Mortgage Subrogated Thereto.—Ohmer v. Boyer, 89 Ala. 273; Smith v. Hall, 67 N. H. 200.

Land Conveyed by Husband in Fraud of Creditors.—Where a judgment debtor conveyed land to a third person for the purpose of enabling such third person to obtain a loan thereon and discharge certain incumbrances, and the transferee conveyed to the debtor's wife, it was held, in an action by the creditors to subject the land to the payment of their judgments, that the wife was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of those whose liens she had paid, and also to the lien of certain taxes paid by her before the judgments were recovered. Brownell v. Stoddard, 42 Neb. 177.

3. Widow Discharging Incumbrance.—Crouch v. Edwards, 52 Ark. 499; Stinson v. Anderson, 96 Ill. 373; Fowler v. Fowler, 78 Mo. App. 330; Becker v. Carey, (N. J. 1897) 36 Atl. And, under similar circumstances, the same equity will arise in favor of life tenants,¹ tenants in common,² sureties on the mortgage,³ creditors of the mortgagor,⁴ mortgagees,⁵ and assignees of terms.⁶

Volunteer Not Entitled to Subrogation.—A mere volunteer who, without any agreement for subrogation, removes a lien or incumbrance from land in which he has no interest to protect, will not be subrogated thereto.⁷ But the interest of the person paying off the incumbrance need not be absolute. A contingent interest is sufficient.⁸

Redemption and Subrogation Distinguished.—In regard to the question of mortgages, it should be observed that the right of the redeeming party to subrogation does not follow as a matter of course from the right of redemption. That right depends on the relation of the parties liable to be foreclosed, to each other, the particular situation of the party claiming such right, and especially and generally on the inquiry whether such subrogation is necessary for the protection of the redeeming party, and consequently on the circumstances in which the right of redemption is sought to be exercised. Thus, where there are several successive mortgages on the same premises, the mortgagor may have a decree for the redemption of the first mortgage, though by payment under such decree he acquires no right to subrogation; so the grantee of the mortgagor, holding the fee subject to the mortgages, may redeem the first mortgage, but he does not thereby become entitled to subrogation.⁹

Full Payment of Incumbrance a Condition Precedent.—As in other cases, the right of subrogation does not become complete, as a general rule, until the incumbrance has been fully paid.¹⁰

2. Purchasers — a. IN GENERAL.—One of the most familiar instances of

1. Life Tenant Discharging Incumbrance.—Kincaid v. Ryan, 64 N. J. Eq. 454; Kocher v. Kocher, 56 N. J. Eq. 545; Wilder v. Wilder, (Vt. 1903) 53 Atl. Rep. 1072.

4. In Louisiana, by Statute, an Ordinary Creditor of the mortgagor upon paying off the mortgage is entitled to subrogation. Walmsley v. Theus, 107, La. 417; Hall v. Hawley, 49 La. Ann. 1046; Zeigler v. His Creditors, 49 La. Ann. 144; Spiller v. Their Creditors, 16 La. Ann. 292.

5. Mortgage Canceled by Mistake.—Where a mortgagee takes a new mortgage as a substitute for a former one, and cancels and releases the latter, in ignorance of an existing lien upon the mortgaged premises, equity will, in the absence of some special disqualifying fact, restore him to his former position, when it can be done without interfering with any new rights acquired on the faith of the altered condition of the record. Capital Lumbering Co. v. Ryan, 34 Oregon 73.

Subrogation Refused to Mortgagee.—Where a cestui que trust recovers lands purchased by the trustee with trust funds, a mortgagee of such land, whose mortgage is held to be invalid, will not be subrogated to the rights of the cestui que trust against the vendor. Royalty v. Shirley, (Ky. 1899) 53 S. W. Rep. 1044.

6. Assignees of Terms.—The assignees of a term may, in order to protect their own interest, redeem a mortgage executed by the lessor prior to the date of their lease, though the demised premises constitute a portion only of those embraced in the mortgage. And upon such redemption the assignees are entitled to an assignment of the mortgage and an acknowledgment thereof, if the mortgage be recorded. Averill v. Taylor, 8 N. Y. 44.

7. Volunteer Not Entitled to Subrogation.—Roberts v. Best, 172 Mo. 67; Fowler v. Fowler, 78 Mo. App. 330; Bigelow v. Cassedy, 26 N. J. Eq. 557; Schreyer v. Saunders, 39 N. Y. 8. Contingent Interest Sufficient to Support Subrogation.—Pease v. Egan, 131 N. Y. 262.

9. Redemption and Subrogation Distinguished.—Jenkins v. Continental Ins. Co., (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 66; Dauchy v. Bennett, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 375. Compare Pardee v. Van Anken, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 514.

10. Full Payment of Incumbrance.—Springer v. Foster, 27 Ind. App. 15; Featherstone v. Emerson, 14 Utah 12.

the application of the doctrine of subrogation is where the purchaser of encumbered property, without having assumed the incumbrance, pays it off, in order to protect his own interest, or to perfect his own title; in such cases, it is uniformly held that he is entitled to be subrogated to the position of the incumbrancer, in respect of all the latter's securities, rights, remedies, and priorities.¹ And this rule applies to purchasers of chattels as well as to purchasers of real property.² But, generally speaking, to entitle a purchaser to subrogation, the claims which he satisfies must be such as would be enforceable against the land in his hands.³

Satisfaction of Incumbrance a Condition Precedent. — As a general rule a purchaser will not be subrogated to the benefit of an incumbrance on the land purchased until he has fully satisfied the same.⁴

Against Whom Right May Be Enforced. — A purchaser of property who has discharged an incumbrance thereon will be subrogated to the lien of such incumbrance as against the holders of other incumbrances of which he had no notice;⁵ but not as against the holders of other incumbrances of which he

A Subpurchaser of land subject to a mortgage, who is compelled to satisfy the mortgage in order to prevent a sale, will be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee against the mortgagor on the mortgage note, but not as to expenses of advertising a sale of the lands. Bock v. Gallagher, 114 Mass. 28.

In Louisiana the subrogation acquired under article 2161 of the Revised Civil Code by a purchaser who employs the price of his purchase in paying the creditors to whom the property is mortgaged is a special one. It is an equitable defensive subrogation, intended to consolidate the property in the hands of the purchaser, and protect him from eviction therefrom at the instance of other creditors. When the amount paid by the purchaser to the mortgage creditors does not exceed the purchase price, the subrogation acquired by him is limited to the property purchased, and does not confer rights upon him to be actively exercised against third parties. Randolph v. Stark, 51 La. Ann. 1121.

But see Sowers's Appeal, (Pa. 1888) 15 Atl. Rep. 898, holding that a purchaser who deposited a fund in court for the payment of an incumbrance was entitled to subrogation even though the amount deposited was insufficient, where the insufficiency arose from a mistake in calculation merely.

had notice, either actual or constructive.¹ Subrogation will not be enforced in such cases to the prejudice of persons having equal or superior equities.²

b. PURCHASER UNDER WARRANTY DEED.—Where land is sold with a warranty against incumbrances, the purchaser, on being compelled to discharge an incumbrance thereon, will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the vendor.³

c. PURCHASER WHOSE TITLE HAS FAILED—(1) In General.—As a general rule where the purchaser's title to the land fails he will be subrogated to the rights of the holders of liens or incumbrances which he has paid, or which have been paid out of the purchase money.⁴

(2) Purchaser at Invalid Tax Sale.—A purchaser of land at an invalid tax sale will be subrogated to the state's lien for the purchase price and all taxes paid by him.⁵

(3) Purchasers at Foreclosure, Judicial, and Quasi-judicial Sales.—The generally received doctrine is that purchasers at foreclosure sales will be subrogated to the rights of holders of claims which have been paid out of the purchase money, in the event that the sale is ineffectual to convey title to the property sold.⁶ And the same equity will arise, under like circumstances, in

In Ohio the Right of Subrogation is Accorded by Statute (Rev. Stat. 1892, § 5410) to purchasers at execution sales whose titles fail by reason of defects in the proceedings. But this statute does not apply where the sale is regular; and a purchaser at a sheriff's sale in a creditor's suit, not being in privity with a mortgage on the land, is not subrogated to any supposed rights of the mortgagee. favor of the grantees of such purchasers.¹ There is, however, a line of cases which deny this position, on the ground that such purchasers are volunteers, acting without compulsion, and for no purpose of protecting any interest of their own, and under a mistake of law, and are, therefore, not entitled to the protection of courts of equity.²

(4) When Purchaser Will Not Be Subrogated.—Subrogation will not be enforced in favor of a purchaser unless it is necessary for his protection.³ A purchaser at a void executor's sale will not be entitled to subrogation where he was cognizant of the executor's want of authority to sell, and was warned not to purchase.⁴ Nor does the right arise where the sale is adjudged void by reason of fraud on the part of the purchaser.⁵

Qualification of Rule.—A purchaser of land at an administrator's sale is not entitled in equity to be subrogated to the claims of the creditors which have been paid by the purchase money, where the title fails for want of jurisdiction in the court ordering the same over the person of the heir. Borders v. Hodges, 154 Ill. 498; Bishop v. O'Connor, 69 Ill. 431. But see Bruschke v. Wright, 166 Ill. 183, 57 Am. St. Rep. 125.

Sale of Homestead by Administrator Contrary to Law.—Under a statute making it a misdemeanor for an administrator to attempt to sell lands reserved from sale as a homestead, a person assuming to be the purchaser at the pretended sale commits no offense under the act; he stands as though the effort to sell were not made a criminal offense, and is entitled to be subrogated to the rights against the estate which were held by the creditors whose claims have been paid with his money. Nor will the mere fact that he assisted the administrator in appraising the lands for the sale make him an accomplice in the former's misdemeanor, and thereby bar his right; in order that his act may have this effect, it must be done with the intent to encourage and induce the administrator to make the sale. Bond v. Montgomery, 56 Ark. 563, 35 Am. St. Rep. 119; Harris v. Watson, 36 Ark. 574.

A Purchaser under a Void Trustee's Sale, if the money paid by him is applied to the extinguishment of the trust debt, becomes the equitable assignee of the debt, and is subrogated to the rights of the original cestui que trust, and, as such, entitled to charge the land in equity with the debt. Bonner v. Lessley, 61 Miss. 392.

If a Sale of Lands under Insolvency Proceedings Be Set Aside at the instance of the heirs who were not made parties thereto, and the purchaser seeks to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors whose claims were allowed and who received a dividend, it is competent for the heirs to show that such claims were barred before inception of the proceedings. d. PURCHASER EXPRESSLY ASSUMING INCUMBRANCE. — If the purchaser expressly assumes to pay the incumbrance, he thereby becomes the principal debtor, primarily and absolutely liable for the debt, and may not be subrogated to the benefit of the incumbrance upon making payment according to his contract.¹

e. INCUMBRANCE PAID AS PART OF PURCHASE PRICE. — A purchaser will not be entitled to subrogation where his payment of an incumbrance on the land constitutes a part of the consideration or purchase price.²

f. PURCHASER OF EQUITY OF REDEMPTION — (1) In General. — The purchaser of an equity of redemption of mortgaged premises on paying the amount due on the mortgage, or taking an assignment thereof, will be entitled to subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee as against intervening rights; in such a case equity will generally treat the incumbrance as still subsisting, and not as merged, so long as it is necessary to do so to protect the rights of the party paying the mortgage debt.³ So it has been held that an assignee of the equity of redemption, who pays and takes up several notes secured by mortgage, under an agreement with the mortgagee that he may hold them in the same manner as the mortgagee held them, is entitled to the same priority of lien that a stranger would have who took an assignment thereof.¹ But it seems that if a mortgage is paid off by the purchaser of the equity of redemption, and by him canceled in fact and on the record, while under the misapprehension that his title is good, he may not, upon discovering the contrary, have the cancellation set aside and the mortgage declared in force on the ground that, had he then known of the defect in his title, he would have taken an assignment of the mortgage.² Nor will one who purchases a mere equity of redemption in terms subject to the payment of the mortgage debt be subrogated to the benefit of other securities held by the mortgagee for the payment of the debt.³

(2) At Execution Sale for Other Debts. — The sale of an equity of redemption under execution other than for the debt secured by the mortgage vests the estate sold in the purchaser subject to the payment of the mortgage debt, and such purchaser will not be entitled to subrogation where he pays the mortgage, or where the amount thereof is collected from other property of the mortgagor.⁴ But in the latter case the mortgagor will be entitled to subrogation.⁵

(3) Purchase by Mortgagee. — The general rule that the purchase of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee will operate a merger of the mortgage is not inflexible; when it is the mortgagee's intention that there shall be no merger, it will not merge; and in the absence of evidence the mortgagee's intention will be presumed to accord with his interest.⁶

incumbrance in order to protect his own interest in the encumbered estate, will, as a general rule, be subrogated to all the rights of the senior incumbrancer, and if necessary for his protection may compel an assignment of the security.¹ But whether the junior incumbrancer takes a formal assignment or not, such a transaction makes him in equity an assignee, and he is entitled to

Execution Creditor Redeeming from Chattel Mortgage.—An execution creditor may, as soon as he has acquired a lien on chattels by a levy of his execution, redeem them from a chattel mortgage which constitutes a prior lien thereon, and on payment of the amount due on the mortgage is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, and to that end may demand

all suitable remedies to enforce reimbursement;¹ and there are cases which hold that, though the prior mortgage may stand discharged of record, instead of having been assigned to the junior mortgagee, he is nevertheless entitled in equity to indemnify himself for such payment out of the mortgaged estate.²

Co-mortgagees who are compelled to redeem from a prior mortgage held and about to be foreclosed by one of themselves will be subrogated to his rights as prior mortgagee, so as to prevent his enjoyment of any interest under the junior mortgage until he shall have reimbursed them his proportion of the amount paid by them to redeem from his prior mortgage.³

b. EXTENT OF RIGHTS ACQUIRED. — A junior mortgagee, as to whose debt the homestead rights of a mortgagor have not been waived, will nevertheless be subrogated to the benefit of such waiver in a senior mortgage which he discharges for the protection of his title.⁴ And where the prior incumbrance embraces property other than that of the junior incumbrance, the holder of the latter will, on paying off the former, be subrogated to the rights of the prior incumbrancer in such property.⁵ He will be entitled to the rate of interest carried by the incumbrance from which he redeems,⁶ and also to tack to his mortgage all necessary expenses incurred by him in removing the prior lien from the mortgaged premises.⁷ And he may foreclose the lien to which he is subrogated before the maturity of his own mortgage.⁸ He will, however, be entitled to subrogation only to the extent of the amount paid by him, and cannot have the benefit of payment from the funds of the debtor or third parties.⁹

c. WHAT PAYMENT SUFFICIENT. — In the absence of agreement a junior mortgagee will not be entitled to subrogation as against a prior mortgagee on payment of a part only of the prior mortgage debt, or of interest accumulated thereon; he must pay the whole debt before he can acquire that right¹⁰ — not only the amount due on the mortgage, but the necessary expenses already an assignment of the mortgage. Lucking v. Wesson, 25 Mich. 443. See also Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18; Smith v. Coolbaugh, 21 Wis. 427; Hinman v. Judson, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 629; Treat v. Gilmore, 49 Me. 34.

10. Full Payment of Senior Mortgage. — Loeb v. Fleming, 15 Ill. App. 503; Stuckman v. Roose, 147 Ind. 402; Swan v. Patterson, 7 Md. 164; Gannett v. Blodgett, 39 N. H. 150; Penn v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., (Ohio) 11 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 582.

The right of subrogation does not exist in favor of the holder of a second mortgage to the prejudice of the paramount lien. Skinke v. Huffman, 52 Neb. 20.

If Only Interest Is Due, the junior mortgagee may redeem by tendering the amount of such interest. Searles v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 2 Woods (U. S.) 621.

Conventional Subrogation. — When the right of subrogation is the result of an express agreement, it is no objection that it extends only to a part of the mortgage or other security. Loeb v. Fleming, 15 Ill. App. 508; Brice's Appeal, 95 Pa. St. 145.

Balance Paid by Debtor or Third Person. — It seems that if the debt be actually discharged the junior incumbrancer will be entitled to subrogation to the extent of the amount he contributed, though the balance of the debt was paid by the debtor or by a third person. Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 31, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204.

incurred by the senior mortgagee in taking steps to enforce the security.¹ But a second mortgagee, who for the protection of his own security pays an instalment due on the first mortgage, will, to the extent of such advancement, as against the mortgagor, be subrogated to the rights of the holder of the first mortgage, and may, on payment by the mortgagor of the balance due on the prior mortgage, enforce by action his lien for the amount so advanced.²

A Tender of Payment by the junior mortgagee, if properly made, will be sufficient to entitle him to subrogation.³

d. WHEN NOT ENTITLED TO SUBROGATION. — Subrogation will be denied to a junior incumbrancer where his payment of the prior incumbrance was not necessary for his protection,⁴ as where the incumbrance paid off does not cover the property embraced by his mortgage;⁵ or where the enforcement of subrogation is not necessary for his protection;⁶ or when to grant it would be clearly inequitable,⁷ as when the right is asserted against intervening bona fide purchasers without notice of the rights of the junior mortgagee;⁸ or where he might have protected himself by purchasing at a foreclosure sale under a prior mortgage, but did not.⁹

4. Mortgagors. — Where a mortgagor has conveyed the mortgaged premises, subject to the lien of the mortgage, the amount of the mortgage debt being deducted from the purchase price, the premises remain the primary fund for the payment of the debt, and if the mortgagor is compelled to pay the same he may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee under the mortgage.¹⁰

1. Expenses Incurred by Senior Mortgagee. — Shutes v. Woodard, 57 Mich. 213. But a junior mortgagee may redeem without paying costs of a foreclosure suit upon a prior mortgage to which he was not made a party. Gage v. Brewster, 31 N. Y. 218; Peabody v. Roberts, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 91; Vroom v. Ditmas, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 526; Benedict v. Gilman, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 58. A fortiori if the vendee assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage, thereby making the debt his own, the same rule applies.¹ And in such cases the mortgagor's right to subrogation will be enforced as against subsequent judgment creditors of the vendee, for the full amount of the principal and interest due on the mortgage.²

A Joint Mortgagor who pays the entire mortgage debt will be entitled to subrogation against his mortgagor for the latter's share of the debt.³

Mortgage Pledged to Secure Debt of Mortgagee.—Where a mortgage has been pledged to secure a debt of the mortgagee, the mortgagor, on payment of the debt to the pledgee, will be subrogated to the rights of the latter as against a subsequent assignee of the mortgage.⁴

5. Persons Advancing Money to Pay Off Incumbrances—a. WHEN ENTITLED TO SUBROGATION IN GENERAL.—One who advances money to pay off an incumbrance on realty at the instance of either the owner of the property or the holder of the incumbrance, either on the express understanding, or under circumstances from which an understanding will be implied, that the advance made is to be secured by a first lien on the property, is not a mere volunteer; and in the event the new security is for any reason not a first lien on the property, the holder of such security, if not chargeable with culpable and inexcusable neglect, will be subrogated to the rights of the prior incumbrancer under the security held by him, unless the superior or equal equities of others

Subsequent Vendee of Another Part of the Land.—In Wright v. Briggs, 99 Ind. 563, it appeared that the owner of mortgaged premises sold a part thereof, the purchaser agreeing to pay the whole of the mortgage debt as a part of the consideration for the portion purchased. The owner then conveyed the rest of the land to C, who in turn conveyed it to D. Afterwards, D, to save his lot from sale, was obliged to pay the mortgage debt, and it was held that he was entitled to a decree of foreclosure against the part of the land first sold, as the purchaser thereof had by his agreement become liable for the debt.

An Indorser of Notes Secured by a Mortgage, on being compelled to pay the same, will be subrogated to the rights of his principal, the mortgagor, against a vendee of the land who has assumed payment of the mortgage; and the subrogation extends not merely to the mortgage security, but to the debt and the remedies to enforce the same. *Nettleton v. Wisconsin. — Levy v. Martin, 48 Wis. 198; Downer v. Miller, 15 Wis. 612.

And see infra, this title, VII. Persons Paying or Advancing Money to Pay Debts of Others — In General — Conventional Subrogation.

The Rule Stated in the Text Applies to Chattel Mortgages as well as to mortgages of real property; and a person advancing money to pay off a chattel mortgage under an agreement providing that he shall have a first lien on the mortgaged chattels is subrogated to the mortgage paid in case his own mortgage proves to be invalid. Lashua v. Myhre, (Wis. 1903) 93 N. W. Rep. 811; Yaple v. Stephens, 36 Kan. 680.

The Subsequent Requirement of the Equity of Redemption by the party entitled to be subrogated will not affect his rights unless the evidence shows that a merger was contemplated. Gore v. Brian, (N. J. 1896) 35 Atl. Rep. 897.

When a Married Woman Who Is Also an Infant obtains a loan of money on mortgage to discharge a lien upon her separate estate, the lender is not subrogated to the lien discharged, mortgages, it is not confined to such cases, but is equally applicable in favor of persons other than volunteers who advance money for the payment of vendor's liens,¹ or who pay the purchase price of property at the request of the vendee.²

b. RULE WHERE LOAN IS USURIOUS.—It has been held that usury in a loan of money used to pay off an incumbrance will not deprive the lender of the right of subrogation to the extent of the principal of the loan and lawful interest thereon.³

c. RIGHTS AS AGAINST INTERVENING INCUMBRANCERS AND PURCHASERS.—A third person who advances money to pay off an incumbrance will not be subrogated thereto where such subrogation would work injustice to other parties, such as intervening incumbrancers or purchasers, whose equities are equal or superior to his own;⁴ but he may be subrogated as against intervening incumbrancers where no substantial injury to their rights will result there-even though his mortgage is void. Carolina Interstate Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Black, 119 N. Car. 223. And see Clifton v. Anderson, 47 Mo. App. 35, holding that under the Missouri statute a married woman could not charge her separate estate by oral agreement.

If, after the sale of mortgaged premises under a judgment, a stranger, in ignorance of the recorded judgment and sale thereunder, advances money to pay off the prior mortgage and takes a new mortgage for his security, he will not be subrogated to the lien of the old mortgage as against the purchaser under the judgment; his want or diligence being the occasion of his loss. Mather v. Jenswold, 72 Iowa 550, followed in Ft. Dodge Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Scott, 86 Iowa 431.

from,¹ and against all parties who subsequently acquire an interest in the property with knowledge of his rights.²

d. WHEN NOT ENTITLED TO SUBROGATION. — A mere stranger who, without any request from or agreement with the parties, voluntarily pays a mortgage or other incumbrance, and allows it to be canceled and discharged, cannot afterwards come into equity and have it reinstated and be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake.³ Nor will subrogation be enforced in cases of this nature where it would work injustice to the creditor,⁴ or where it is unnecessary for the protection of the party claiming it,⁵ or where the evidence shows that the loan was made entirely on the faith of new security executed by the borrower, and not on the faith of subrogation.⁶

e. WAIVER OF RIGHT BY LACHES. — The right here considered may be waived by the laches of the party claiming it.⁷

V. BENEFICIARIES, HEIRS, DEVISEES, LEGATEES, AND WIDOWS — 1. Beneficiaries in General. — Where a trust to pay or secure debts has failed, a beneficiary who has, under compulsion, paid such debts to protect his interest in the property, will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor paid.⁸

Wards. — Where notes given by a guardian for the purchase price of land are paid with money belonging to the ward, the latter will be entitled to the benefit of the vendor's lien on such land.⁹ So a ward will be subrogated to the benefit of a mortgage executed by his guardian to a surety on the guardianship bond, where such mortgage is given to secure the proper performance of the guardian's duties, as well as to indemnify the surety;¹⁰ but he will not be entitled to the benefit of a mortgage given by the guardian or a third person simply for indemnity to the surety.¹

2. Heirs and Next of Kin.—An heir who pays the debt of his ancestor, or more than his share thereof, will, as a rule, be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the other heirs.² If he pays a judgment against his ancestor in order to protect his own interests, he may compel an assignment of the judgment that he may have the benefit of the lien thereof.³ But he is entitled to no such right as against one who has purchased from the ancestor a portion of his land, the portion remaining a part of the estate being primarily applicable to the payment of such debts.⁴ A lien debt against the land of a decedent which has been discharged by the administrator cannot be revived in favor of one heir against another who has received more than his share of the personalty.⁵ Nor can an heir who pays the debts and funeral expenses of his ancestor out of his own funds, as a matter of bounty, be allowed repayment out of the personal estate.⁶

Next of Kin.—Where the committee of a lunatic pays a mortgage on his real estate out of his personal property, the next of kin of such lunatic, after his death, cannot be subrogated to the benefit of the mortgage as against the heirs.⁷

3. Devisees.—A specific devisee who pays a debt of the testator in order to protect his interest will be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the personal estate of the testator,⁸ and against other devisees who were liable to contribute to the payment of the debt.⁹

4. Legatees.—A legatee who discharges a claim against the estate of the testator in order to prevent the appropriation of his legacy to the payment of such claim, or whose legacy has been appropriated to the payment of the same, will be entitled to the benefit of any securities the creditor may hold against the estate, subject to the rules prescribing the order of liability of the different funds for the payment of debts.¹⁰ This rule does not apply, however, where Creditor of Ward Subrogated to Fund in Hands of Surety.—Where the appointment of a guardian is held to be void, a judgment creditor of the ward will be subrogated to the ward's rights as against a fund turned over by the de facto guardian to a surety on his bond, such guardian having failed to render an account. *Hazelton v. Taxes Paid by Executor from Proceeds of Real Estate.—If an executor pay the taxes on a decedent's estate out of the proceeds of the real estate when there is sufficient personal property to pay the same, but it is admitted that the unpreferred claims against the estate are in excess of the assets received by him, the heir at law will have no right as against the unpreferred creditors to claim a like amount from the proceeds of the personal property. Smith v. Cornell, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 499. Compare Boring v. Jobe, (Tenn. Ch. 1899) 53 S. W. Rep. 763.

No Subrogation Where Estate Is Insolvent.—Heirs of an insolvent estate who, supposing it to be solvent, satisfy mortgages of the ancestor, will not be subrogated to the lien of the mortgages; nor, if they pay off judgments against the ancestor, after the liens of such judgments have expired, will they acquire any priority over general creditors. Belcher v. Wickersham, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 111.

the debt paid is really that of the legatee.¹ Nor will a residuary legatee, whose legacy is subject to the debts of his testator, be entitled to subrogation on paying such debts.²

5. Widow.—A widow who pays the debts of her deceased husband to protect her interest in the estate will be subrogated to the rights of the creditors paid.³ If lands be sold clear of dower and the proceeds paid to the heirs or applied to the payment of debts without deducting the share to which the widow is entitled in lieu of dower, she will be substituted to the benefit of other funds arising from the sale of her husband's real estate.⁴

VI. PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES, FIDUCIARIES, AND OFFICERS—1. Personal Representatives.—A personal representative who pays a debt of the estate out of his own means,⁵ or makes advancements to creditors,⁶ legatees, or distributees,⁷ will in either case, to the extent of assets for which he is liable, be subrogated to all the rights of the creditors, legatees, or distributees against the estate,⁸ including priority and dignity of claim.⁹ So an administrator who pays debts of the estate out of a fund from which the widow is dowable,

One of several specific legatees who has been compelled to pay the whole of a debt due by his testator will not be subrogated to the right of the creditor as against his co-legatees, who have received their legacies, where the estate is solvent independent of such legacies, or where it has been rendered insolvent by the devastavit of the executor. and is compelled to reimburse her, will be subrogated to the rights of the creditors against the unadministered assets of the estate.¹

A Personal Representative Who Pays Taxes and Assessments on property specifically devised by the testator will be subrogated to the lien thereof as against the devisee.²

A Personal Representative Who Is Compelled to Make Good a Fraud on the estate will be subrogated to the rights of the estate against the wrongdoers.³

Personal Representative Charging Himself with Debt of Others. — If a personal representative charge himself, in his accounts, with liabilities with which another is primarily chargeable, he will be subrogated to the rights of the estate against that person.⁴

An Executor Who Has Been Compelled to Answer for the Default or Devastavit of his coexecutor will be entitled to subrogation.⁵

Subrogation in Behalf of Estate. — An administrator will be entitled to subrogation in behalf of the estate where he discharges liabilities with which others are primarily chargeable out of the general assets of the estate.⁶

Subrogation Will Not Be Enforced in Favor of the Personal Representative where he pays debts out of the order of their priority,⁷ or is otherwise guilty of maladministration of the estate,⁸ or where he negligently fails to assert his right in a chancery suit for the administration of the estate to which he and the legatees are parties.⁹ And an administrator who pays the funeral expenses of one of the infant heirs of his intestate's estate, and takes no assignment of the claim, is a mere volunteer and not entitled to be subrogated to the undertaker's claim against the interest of the deceased heir in the ancestor's estate.¹⁰

2. Fiduciaries in General — Trustees and Guardians — a. FIDUCIARIES IN GENERAL. — As a general rule, a fiduciary who removes a prior incumbrance on the trust estate may be subrogated to the benefit thereof against the estate;¹¹ but he may not, by voluntarily discharging the claim secured by the

Proof of Claim Required. — The personal representative claiming subrogation must establish his claim by the same kind of testimony which would be required of creditors, and subject to the same defenses which would operate against them. *McNeill v. 3. Personal Representatives Making Good Fraud upon Estate. — Thomas v. Bridges, 73 Mo. 530. In this case a purchaser at an administrator's sale, falsely representing himself to be the owner of an allowance against the estate, was given credit for the amount thereof as part payment of the purchase money. The administrator was afterwards compelled to pay the allowance to the real owner out of his own pocket, and it was held that he was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the estate, and to have a vendor's lien enforced against the land in the hands of one who had received a voluntary conveyance from the purchaser, though without knowledge of the fraud.

trust, be subrogated to the rights of the original claimant against the estate.¹

b. TRUSTEES. — The doctrine of subrogation is frequently applied in favor of trustees.² A court of equity, independent of any agreement, will consider money advanced by a trustee to purchase in an outstanding title as an advance for the benefit of his cestui que trust, and not for his own use, giving him a lien on the property until he is reimbursed for the advancement.³

c. GUARDIANS. — A guardian will be entitled to subrogation where he removes an incumbrance from his ward's estate,⁴ or where he is compelled to make good the default of a former-guardian.⁵ But where he makes an illegal investment of his ward's money he cannot be subrogated to the benefit of such investment on being compelled to account.⁶

3. Officers — a. IN GENERAL. — A Collector of Internal Revenue cannot be regarded as surety for a bank in which his deputy has deposited government money contrary to law, and therefore he will not be subrogated to the rights of the government on being compelled to answer for the loss of such money.⁷

b. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES. — It has been held frequently that an officer who becomes liable for the amount of a judgment, by reason of his failure to discharge his official duty when an execution is placed in his hands, may, on payment of the judgment debt, be subrogated to the rights of the judgment creditor.⁸ So the equity of subrogation may arise in favor of an officer who has been compelled to compensate the execution plaintiff for the loss of property levied on, by reason of the insufficiency of the claim bond given by the defendant,¹ or in favor of an officer who has been held liable as special bail;² but not where the liability of the officer is for not applying the avails of property sold, as in such a case the rights of the judgment creditor are extinguished, and there is nothing to which he can be subrogated.³

No Subrogation Where Payment Is Voluntary.—Subrogation will not be enforced in favor of a sheriff or other officer where he voluntarily pays the judgment debt without being under any legal obligation to do so,⁴ or where he pays money to the judgment plaintiff without any previous demand or request for its payment by the judgment debtor;⁵ but if he is under legal obligation to make the payment, the fact that judgment has not been obtained against him will not render him a volunteer so as to deprive him of the right.⁶

VII. PERSONS PAYING OR ADVANCING MONEY TO PAY DEBTS OF OTHERS—

1. In General—a. VOLUNTEERS AND STRANGERS.—One who advances money to pay the debt of another, in the absence of agreement, express or implied, for subrogation, will not be entitled to succeed to the rights and remedies of the creditor so paid unless there is some obligation, interest, or right, legal or equitable, on the part of such person in respect of the matter concerning which the advance is made, as otherwise he is a stranger, a volunteer, an intermeddler, to whom the equitable right of subrogation is never accorded.⁷

either the debtor or creditor.¹ But where the creditor is not a party to the agreement subrogation will not be enforced to his prejudice,² or to the prejudice of innocent third parties having equal equities.³

Prior Agreement Inferred from Subsequent Acts.—In some cases it has been held that a prior agreement for subrogation may be inferred from the subsequent acts and dealings of the parties.⁴

Louisiana Statute.—In Louisiana, by statute, subrogation by act of the debtor, independent of the creditor, can take place only by an express convention or agreement which must appear by an act declaring it, and a receipt for the money, executed by the debtor before a notary and witnesses.⁵

(2) Payment of Entire Debt Not a Condition Precedent.—Conventional subrogation differs from legal subrogation in that payment of the entire debt is not a condition precedent to its enforcement where there is an agreement that the party paying shall be subrogated upon part payment.⁶

2. Persons Advancing Money to Infants or Married Women to Pay for Necessaries.—In a number of cases it has been held that a person who advances money to an infant⁷ or to a married woman for the purchase of necessities may, on proof that the money was so applied, be subrogated to the rights of the person furnishing the necessities.⁸ But in a recent case in Massachusetts this right has been denied as regards advances to married women.⁹

3. Persons Advancing Money to Pay Workmen.—An officer of a corporation who, without any obligation on his part, and merely to befriend laborers employed by the company, advances the amount of their wages, without an assignment of their claims, or an agreement that he shall have the benefit of their statutory liens, may not, on the insolvency of the company, be subrogated to such liens.¹⁰ Nor will a merchant who pays store orders given to workmen for their wages be subrogated to a preferred claim for wages conferred on such workmen by statute.¹¹ who advance money to pay the debts of a decedent, or to discharge liens on the estate, at the request of parties interested therein, and with the understanding that they shall succeed to the rights of the creditors paid, will be subrogated to the claims of such creditors,¹ or to the claims of the personal representative for reimbursement;² especially where securities which they have taken for the repayment of the loan prove to be void.³ But a person who lends money with which legacies charged on a devise of land are paid will not be subrogated to the rights of the legatees against the land devised, in the absence of any agreement to that effect.⁴

5. Persons Advancing Money for Purchase of Railroad Right of Way. — In the absence of contract no right of subrogation arises in favor of a person who has loaned money to a railroad company for the purchase of a right of way.⁵

6. Persons Advancing Rent to Tenant. — A person who advances the rent of land to a tenant will not be subrogated to the landlord's lien, in the absence of any agreement for subrogation.⁶

7. Stranger Furnishing Maintenance to Cestui Que Trust. — Where land is devised on condition that the devisee shall maintain a certain person during his life, a stranger who furnishes such maintenance, at the request of the beneficiary, will be subrogated to his rights against the devisee.⁷

8. Stockholder Paying Corporate Debts. — A stockholder has an interest in protecting the assets of the corporation, and a payment by him of corporate debts beyond his ratable share of liability will not be deemed voluntary, but will entitle him to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors paid.⁸

9. Persons Paying Expenses and Fees of Public Officers. — A person who pays the expenses of a public officer, and a certain amount agreed on for his services, is not subrogated to the officer's fees.⁹

10. County or City Discharging Liability of Another. — Where a county pays the expenses of a pauper lunatic in a state asylum it seems that it will be subrogated to the rights of the asylum against the district of the pauper's settle-

8. Stockholder Paying Corporate Debts. — Redington v. Cornwell, 90 Cal. 49; City Bank v. Crossland, 65 Ga. 734.

Stockholder Redeeming from Execution Sale. — If the property of a corporation is sold under execution, and the corporate authorities take no steps to redeem within the period prescribed by law, a stockholder may interpose and redeem for the benefit of the corporation, and hold the property liable for the money so advanced; and by so doing, he becomes the equitable assignee of the certificates of sale, and will be subrogated to all the rights of the original purchaser at the sale. Wright v. Oroville Gold, etc., Min. Co., 40 Cal. 20.

When Not Entitled to Subrogation. — Money paid by a stockholder either directly to the corporation in the way of assessments, or on account of his personal liability as a stockholder directly to the creditor, and which he was bound to pay under the law, cannot be recovered back by subrogation. Sacramento Bank v. Pacific Bank, 124 Cal. 147, 71 Am. St. Rep. 36.

ment.¹ And if it pays the indebtedness, to the state, of its defaulting treasurer, to save itself from certain statutory pains and penalties, it will not be regarded as a volunteer, but will be entitled to succeed to the rights and remedies of the state against the treasurer.² But a municipality which voluntarily pays the fees of officers appointed by the legislature to determine the boundary line between it and another municipality, under a resolution of the legislature that such fees shall be paid by the municipalities, one-half by each, may not recover from the other municipality any part of the sum so paid.³

11. Judgment Debtor Paying Judgment Which Has Been Satisfied. — A judgment debtor who pays the amount of the judgment to the creditor, after his land has been sold under such judgment, is a volunteer, and will not be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against third persons.⁴

12. Persons Paying Expense of Litigation in Behalf of Town. — A person who, in good faith, advances money to pay the expenses of litigation on behalf of a town may be subrogated to the rights of the parties paid with the money thus advanced, where notes which he has received for the loan are held invalid in an action at law.⁵

13. Persons Lending Money to Corporations. — A person who lends money to a corporation will, if the loan be declared ultra vires on the part of the corporation, be subrogated to the rights of creditors whose claims are satisfied out of the loan.⁶

VIII. INSURANCE COMPANIES — 1. Subrogation Against Carriers — a. IN GENERAL. — When goods which are insured are lost or damaged through the fault or neglect of a carrier in whose possession they are for purposes of transportation, the insurer, on payment of the loss to the owner of the goods, will be subrogated to the rights of such owner against the carrier.⁷ The insurer's right to be thus subrogated may, however, be defeated by an express contract between the owner and the carrier of the goods, that the carrier shall have the benefit of any insurance on them in case of loss.⁸ But if the contract of insurance contains an express stipulation that the insurer shall, in such case, be subrogated to the owner's rights against the carrier, the owner cannot defeat the insurer's right of subrogation by contract with the carrier without forfeiting his own rights under the contract of insurance.¹

b. DEFENSES IN ACTION TO ENFORCE.—In an action for the benefit of an insurer who has become subrogated to the rights of the owner of goods, the carrier cannot avail himself of any defenses which the insurer might have interposed in an action on the contract of insurance.² But he may avail himself of any defense which would have been available to him in an action against him by the owner of the goods.³

2. Subrogation Against Tortfeasors—a. IN GENERAL.—If insured buildings or other property are destroyed through the fault or negligence of some person other than the owner, the insurance company, upon payment of the loss, will be subrogated to the right of the owner to recover from the wrongdoer.⁴ This right of subrogation is frequently enforced against railroad companies which have become liable to the owners of property on account of fires caused by their locomotives.⁵ And in some jurisdictions

b. EXTENT OF RIGHT.—The rights of the insurer against the wrongdoer can be no greater than those of the insured;² and its recovery will be limited to the amount which it has paid on the loss.³ If the underwriter refuses to contribute to the expenses of an action by the insured against the wrongdoer, he can recover from the insured only the surplus of the amount recovered by the latter from the wrongdoer after satisfying uncompensated losses and expenses incurred in the suit.⁴

c. FULL PAYMENT OF LOSS A CONDITION PRECEDENT.—The owner must be fully indemnified for the loss of his property, before subrogation will be allowed to the insurer.⁵

d. ACTS OF INSURED AFFECTING RIGHT.—The insured cannot bar the insurer's right of action by executing a release of damages to the wrongdoer,⁶ though he may release the wrongdoer from all claim for injuries not covered by the policy, without impairing his rights against the underwriter.¹ On payment of the loss the insured becomes a trustee for the insurer,² and cannot afterwards settle or compromise his claim against the wrongdoer to the insurer's prejudice.³ If he obtains satisfaction from the wrongdoer he must account therefor to the insurer.⁴

e. DEFENSES IN ACTION TO ENFORCE.—In an action by the insurer to enforce his right of subrogation it is no defense that the insurer was negligent in assuming the risk,⁵ or that the loss paid was not within the risks covered by the policy.⁶ Nor can the wrongdoer when sued by the insured for the benefit of the insurer set up payment of the loss by the insurer as a defense.⁷

3. Subrogation Against Third Parties Bound to Indemnify Insured.—An insurer who has paid a loss to the insured is subrogated to the rights of the latter, not only as against tortfeasors responsible for the destruction of the property, but also as against all persons bound by contract or otherwise to make good the amount of the loss.⁸ Thus an insurance company which has paid the value of revenue stamps destroyed by fire is subrogated to the right of the owner of the stamps to recover their value from the government.⁹

4. Marine Insurance—a. IN GENERAL.—An underwriter who has paid a loss resulting from injury to, or destruction of, a ship or cargo, is entitled to be subrogated to any rights the owner may have to indemnity from those primarily liable for the loss;¹⁰ including the right of the owner to enforce contri-

Ins. Co. v. Johnston*, 113 Mich. 426.

Rights under Pooling Contract.—An insurance company which has paid a loss upon a grain elevator destroyed by fire will not be subrogated to the rights of the owner of the elevator in a fund set apart in accordance with a pooling contract between such owner and the owners of other elevators whereby the profits from the different elevators were to be divided equally between the owners, regardless of losses resulting from the destruction of any particular elevator. *Michael v. bution from third persons by way of general average.¹ So underwriters who have paid losses on vessels wrongfully taken or destroyed by the enemy in time of war will be subrogated to the rights of the owners in a fund subsequently awarded to them by the government by way of indemnity.²

b. ABANDONMENT NOT ESSENTIAL. — It is not necessary that there be an abandonment of the property insured on a marine policy in order that the underwriter may be subrogated to the rights of an owner who has been fully indemnified.³ But in case there is no abandonment, the owner must be fully indemnified for his loss before the underwriter can claim the right of subrogation.⁴

c. EXTENT OF RIGHT. — The underwriter does not acquire by subrogation any rights which the assured himself could not enforce.⁵ Under an ordinary policy the right of the underwriters who have paid a total loss to recover against third parties who caused the damage is limited, on equitable principles, to the amount paid;⁶ but under a valued policy, where the agreed value of the vessel has been paid, all rights of action, irrespective of the amount which may be recovered, vest absolutely in the insurers.⁷

d. Insurance of Mortgaged Property. — It has been held repeatedly that where a mortgagee, at his own expense, procures the insurance on the mortgaged property for the better security of his debt, the insurer, if obliged to pay a loss occasioned by injury to such property, may be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee under the mortgage.¹ But if the mortgagor pays the premiums, or is liable for the same, he is entitled to the benefit of the insurance, and the insurer will not be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights against him,² unless the policy of insurance contains an express stipulation that the insurer shall be so subrogated,³ or the mortgagor has forfeited his rights and the policy has been kept alive for the benefit of the mortgagee on condition that the insurer shall be subrogated.⁴

6. Life and Accident Insurance.—A contract of life insurance is not a contract of indemnity, and therefore, where the death of the insured is caused by the wrongful act of another the insurer acquires no right of action against the wrongdoer by paying the loss.⁵ Nor does the right of subrogation exist in favor of the insurer in an accident policy under similar circumstances.⁶ But a life insurance company which has been induced by fraud to pay a policy to the wrong person may, on being compelled to pay the amount a second time, recover back the first payment.⁷

7. In Whose Name Action Should Be Brought.—As a general rule, and in the absence of statutory provisions on the subject, an action to enforce an insurer's right of subrogation should be brought in the name of the insured.⁸ In juris-

IX. SUBROGATION ARISING FROM PAYMENT OF TAXES AND DUTIES — 1. Payment of Taxes — a. IN GENERAL. — Although doubt has been expressed in some well-considered cases as to whether persons paying taxes for which others are primarily liable can be subrogated to the peculiar remedies of the state against the delinquents,⁴ it seems, by the weight of authority, that subrogation to the lien of taxes may be enforced in favor of persons discharging them by compulsion or agreement.⁵

b. TENANT IN COMMON. — In accordance with the view that a party who is obliged to pay taxes on the land of another for his own protection will be subrogated to the lien thereof, it has been held that a tenant in common who pays taxes on the common property will be subrogated to the tax lien for reimbursement.⁶

c. LESSOR. — Where by the contract of lease the lessee engages to pay all subsequent taxes on the property, but fails to do so, the lessor having an interest as owner in discharging the debt will, on payment, be subrogated to the rights of the state or municipality against the lessee;⁷ but as the rights of the claimant for subrogation cannot be higher than those of the party to whose position he succeeds, if the lessor fails to prosecute this right until the right of the state or municipality has been lost by lapse of time his right will likewise be lost.⁸

d. VENDOR OR VENDEE OF LAND. — Where a vendee of land fails to pay taxes for which he is liable under the contract of sale, the vendor, on payment thereof, will be subrogated to the lien of the state or municipality.⁹ On the other hand, where by the terms of sale the taxes are to be paid by the vendor, the vendee, if compelled to discharge them, will be entitled to subrogation.¹⁰

mortgagee or other incumbrancer who, for the protection of his interest, pays taxes assessed on the property, will be subrogated to the lien thereof for his reimbursement.¹ So a mortgagee of a term who has paid taxes and ground rent on the property leased will be subrogated to the rights of the lessor against the lessee to recover the amount paid.² Again, where a junior mortgagee pays assessments on the property after a sale to the municipality for their nonpayment, and takes an assignment of the certificates of sale, and the assessments are, by the city's charter, a lien prior to other incumbrances, he will be entitled by equitable subrogation to the benefit of the city's lien, in advance of the rights of a senior mortgagee.³

f. PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE.—A personal representative who pays taxes and assessments on property specifically devised by the testator will be subrogated to the lien thereof as against the devisee.⁴

g. VOLUNTEER NOT ENTITLED TO SUBROGATION.—A person who voluntarily pays taxes assessed on the land of another in which he has no interest to protect will not be subrogated to the lien of the government, in the absence of an agreement for subrogation.⁵ This rule has been held to apply to tax collectors who have voluntarily paid, or advanced funds to pay, the taxes of delinquents.⁶ And in such cases subrogation is also refused on the ground of public policy.⁷

h. Payment of Customs Duties.—A surety on the bond of an importer for customs duties will be subrogated to the government's lien and priority on payment of the duties.⁸ And the same equity will arise in favor of a purchaser of goods subject to duty who is compelled to pay the tax in order to obtain possession of the goods,⁹ or a person who advances money to pay duties under an agreement for subrogation,¹⁰ or a carrier paying duties on goods delivered for transportation.¹ So, in England, the sureties of a crown debtor for customs, excise, taxes, and other civil duties, on paying the debt of their principal, are entitled to have the benefit of prerogative process to aid them in coercing payment from the principal and compelling contribution from their cosureties.²

X. SUBROGATION IN ADMIRALTY.—The equity of subrogation is as fully recognized in courts of admiralty as in the chancery courts.³ Thus one who advances money in good faith to enable the master of a foreign vessel to pay the wages of his crew and other claims will be subrogated to the rights of seamen and others whose claims are so paid.⁴ And if a vessel is injured in collision by the joint fault of two other vessels and one of them pays the loss, it will be subrogated to the rights of the injured vessel against the other wrongdoer.⁵ But as a bond given for the release of a vessel libeled in a court of admiralty operates to extinguish the lien of the libellant, and as all liens on a vessel are extinguished by a sale of the vessel pursuant to the decree of a court of admiralty in a suit in rem, it follows that a surety who pays such a bond, after the vessel has been sold, is not entitled by subrogation to any rights in the proceeds of the sale.⁶ Nor will a guarantor who has contracted for a lien on freight alone be subrogated to other liens attaching to the vessel in a foreign port, on the ground that the money obtained on the strength of his guaranty went to pay and discharge such liens.⁷

Rights of Subrogation Arising Out of Marine Insurance Contracts are discussed in another section of the present article.⁸

XI. VARIOUS OTHER INSTANCES OF SUBROGATION—1. Subrogation to Enforce Marshaling of Assets.—The doctrine of subrogation is very frequently invoked to enforce the equitable right of marshaling; the general rule being that when one creditor may obtain satisfaction out of either of two funds, and another out of only one of them, and the former resorts to the doubly charged

The court in this case felt itself bound by the decision in The Larch, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 427, but took occasion to disapprove of much of the reasoning of the court in that case.

fund, the latter will be subrogated to his rights against the other fund, to the extent to which his own may have been exhausted.¹

2. Subrogation Arising from Contracts for Public Works.—A surety on the bond of a contractor for the construction of public works who is obliged to complete the work on the failure of his principal to do so, or who is held liable to subcontractors or materialmen, will be subrogated to all the rights of the government against the contractor, including the right to apply a percentage of the contract price retained by the government to the satisfaction of his claim.² And an indemnitor of a surety will be entitled to the same right under similar circumstances.³ But a party furnishing materials to be used by a contractor in constructing or repairing a public building, simply on the contractor's promise to pay, in the absence of statute or agreement, will not be substituted to the contractor's rights in a fund provided by the government for the work, though the contractor is insolvent;⁴ nor will he be subrogated to the rights of the government in a bond given by the contractor conditioned to protect the obligee against all damages from failure to complete the contract, and to turn over the work free from liens, where such conditions have been complied with.⁵

3. Subrogation of Agents and Attorneys.—a. IN GENERAL.—As a general rule an agent who is bound by the terms of his contract with his principal to make good all losses resulting from dealings with third persons will, on satisfying such a loss, be subrogated to the rights of the principal against the party whose default has been made good.⁶ So, an agent who uses his own private means to protect the estate of his principal, with which he is intrusted, is not a volunteer, but is entitled to be subrogated to the position and rights of the principal.⁷

General Creditors Subrogated to Rights of Preferred Creditors.—Where an insolvent corporation has lawfully preferred the note of a creditor, the fact that directors are indorsers thereon does not defeat such creditor's preference. The result is to subrogate the general creditors to the rights of the preferred creditor, against the indorsing directors, to the extent of the preference. Savage v. Miller, 56 N. J. Eq. 432.

Right Waived by Laches.—The right to subrogation to enforce marshaling may be lost by the laches of the party having a lien on one fund only, in failing to notify the other creditor that he will be required to collect his claim from the other fund. Ocobock v. Baker, 52 Neb. 447, 66 Am. St. Rep. 519.

Creditors of Subcontractor.—In Falmouth Nat. Bank v. Cape Cod Ship Canal Co., 166 Mass. 550, it was held that the holders of debenture bonds issued by a subcontractor would not be subrogated to the benefit of a fund deposited with the state by the principal contractor as security for the completion of the contract, even though the proceeds of such bonds had been used in the payment of claims which would have been a lien on the fund.

Money Lost Through Insolvency of Bank.—One who as agent for another deposits money in a bank and is compelled to make good the loss thereof through the bank's insolvency, will be subrogated to the rights of his principal against the bank. Stroller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 514.

Agent Liable for Goods Sold to Insolvent.—An agent who, under the terms of his contract with his principal, becomes liable for goods sold to an insolvent person, will be subrogated to the rights of his principal against such person. Nichols v. Wadsworth, 40 Minn. 547.

General Insurance Agent Compelled to Make Good Default of Local Agent.—Hough v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 57 Ill. 318, 11 Am. Rep. 18.

b. INSURANCE AGENT ADVANCING PREMIUMS. — According to some authorities an insurance agent who advances premiums on behalf of the insured will be subrogated to the rights of the company to collect such premiums.¹

c. ATTORNEYS. — An attorney who has become liable to his client by failing to collect such client's money from a sheriff, who has made the money on execution, may be subrogated to the client's rights against the sheriff.²

4. Subrogation of Carriers. — As a general rule a carrier who satisfies losses³ or pays charges for which others are primarily liable will be subrogated to the rights of the party paid.⁴ But where his negligence has resulted in loss to innocent third parties he will be required to place such parties in statu quo before subrogation will be enforced in his favor.⁵

5. Subrogation of Holders of Void Obligations — County Bonds, Receivers' Certificates, etc. — A purchaser of county or municipal bonds which are subsequently declared void will not be subrogated to the rights of creditors paid from the proceeds of such bonds, against the county or town issuing them.⁶ But it has been held that where a receiver of a railroad company issues certificates in excess of the amount authorized by the court, purchasers of such certificates may be subrogated to the rights of holders of mortgage bonds of the company who have received payments of interest from the proceeds.⁷

6. Subrogation to Equitable Lien for Improvements on Land. — Where a tenant in common, with the knowledge of his cotenant, borrows money, and uses the same in improving the common property, the lender will be subrogated to his equitable lien against his cotenants for their share of the improvements.⁸ So mechanics and materialmen making improvements on leased premises may

1. Insurance Agent Advancing Premiums. — Gillett v. Insurance Co. of North America, 39 Ill. App. 284; Boston Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Thomas, 59 Kan. 470. But to the contrary see Parsons v. John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co., 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 263, in which case it was held that the agent was a mere volunteer.

2. Attorney Subrogated Against Sheriff. — Governor v. Raley, 34 Ga. 173.

3. Subrogation of Carrier Making Up Deficiency in Quantity of Goods. — Vega Steamship Co. v. Consolidated Elevator Co., 75 Minn. 308, 74 Am. St. Rep. 484.

Carrier Held Liable for Theft of Agent. — Where notes issued by a bank were sent to it through an express company, and, while in transit, a part were stolen by an agent of the company, it was held that, upon making good the loss, the company became the owner of the notes, and upon proof that such notes had been destroyed by the defaulting agent, might recover their value from the bank. Hagerstown Bank v. Adams Express Co., 45 Pa. St. 419, 84 Am. Dec. 499.

Carrier Liable for Failure to Deliver Goods. — If a carrier, failing to deliver goods by reason of a wrongful attachment, is held liable to the consignee, he will be subrogated to the rights of the consignee against the attaching officers. Holmes v. Balcom, 84 Me. 226.

4. A Carrier of Goods Who Advances to Forwarding Agents charges on goods for freight and storage, will be subrogated to the rights of the agents against the consignee and owner of the goods. Briggs v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 6 Allen (Mass.) 246, 83 Am. Dec. 636; Wells v.

Thomas, 27 Mo. 20, 72 Am. Dec. 228; Steamboat Virginia v. Kraft, 25 Mo. 76, limiting the right to subrogation to lawful and proper charges for transportation only; Western Transp. Co. v. Hoyt, 69 N. Y. 230, 25 Am. Rep. 175; White v. Vann, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 70, 44 Am. Dec. 294.

A Purchaser of Void County Bonds Issued in Exchange for Valid Warrants will be subrogated to the rights of the original warrant holders, and entitled to recover the amount of the warrants from the county. Coffin v. Kearney County, 114 Fed. Rep. 518, following Irvine v. Kearney County, 75 Fed. Rep. 765, and distinguishing Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 534.

The Assignee of an Imperfect and Irregular School Warrant issued in lieu of a valid warrant, will be subrogated to all the rights of his assignor in the original security, and will be entitled to demand and receive possession thereof, and to have the same reformed by the proper authorities. Goldsmith v. Stewart, 45 Ark. 149.

7. Subrogation of Purchasers to Rights of Vendors. — As a general rule a purchaser of land or chattels will succeed to all the rights and remedies of his vendor in respect to the property purchased.² But it seems that he will not be subrogated to the benefit of his vendor's claim against a prior vendor for a deficiency in the quantity of the land, in the absence of an express agreement permitting such subrogation.³

8. Subrogation of Persons Paying for Damage Done by Servants. — A person who has satisfied a claim for damages caused by the negligence of his servant may be subrogated to the rights of the person injured against the servant.⁴

9. Subrogation to Defenses and Estoppels. — The right of subrogation or substitution extends to defenses⁵ and estoppels as well as to rights of action.⁶

XII. WAIVER OF RIGHT. — The right of subrogation may be expressly waived,⁷ or a waiver may be implied from the acts of the claimant.⁸

Negligence and Laches in the enforcement of a claim to subrogation will sometimes be held a waiver;⁹ especially where such enforcement would result in injury to the rights of others.¹⁰

1. Mechanics and Materialmen Subrogated to Landlord's Lien. — Rubel v. Avritt, (Ky. 1898) 47 S. W. Rep. 460. And see generally the title MECHANICS' LIENS, vol. 20, p. 255.

2. Purchaser Subrogated to Rights of Vendor. — Fisher v. Johnson, 5 Ind. 492; Logan v. Taylor, 20 Iowa 297; O. S. Kelly Co. v. Lobenthal, 8 Ohio Cir. Dec. 300, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. 343; Polk v. Kyser, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 676. See also City Bank v. Smisson, 73 Ga. 422; Bonds v. Strickland, 60 Ga. 624.

When Not Subrogated. — A person who purchases lands at a private sale will not be subrogated to the benefit of a mortgage paid by his vendors, the heirs of the mortgagor, as against a third person who is not liable for any part of the mortgage debt. Demourelle v. Piazza, 77 Miss. 433.

3. Chambliss v. Miller, 15 La. Ann. 713; Davis v. Clark, 33 N. J. Eq. 579. See also Powell v. Hayes, 31 La. Ann. 789.

5. Bank Subrogated to Defense of Depositor. — A. T. Albro Co. v. Fountain, 162 N. Y. 498.

Subrogation to Defenses Against Mortgage Refused. — If a stranger procures an injunction to a foreclosure and gives an injunction bond conditioned to pay the mortgage debt, and the injunction is dissolved, he cannot claim to be subrogated to defenses which the mortgagor might make against the mortgage, nor any other defense except performance of the covenants or such legal defense as would overthrow the bond itself. Lewis v. City Nat. Bank, 72 Ill. 543.

6. Grantee in Deed of Trust Subrogated to Grantor's Right to Claim Estoppel. — Colonial, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Tubbs, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. Rep. 623.

7. Subrogation Expressly Waived. — Midland Banking Co. v. Chambers, L. R. 7 Eq. 179; Es p. Hope, 3 Mont. D. & De G. 720; Es p. Miles, 1 De G. 623; U. S. Bank v. Peter, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 123.

v. Miller, 7 Pa. Dist. 686; Leydon v. Malloy, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 820, 10 Ohio Cir. Ct. 442.

A Surety Who Refuses to Take Control of a Judgment and execution offered him by the creditor thereby waives his right of subrogation. Hubbell v. Carpenter, 5 N. Y. 173.

Waiver of Subrogation to Tax Lien. — A senior mortgagee who pays a tax lien on the mortgaged premises under an agreement with the junior mortgagee for reimbursement, and joins in a conveyance to the junior mortgagee under a foreclosure sale, thereby waives his right of subrogation to the tax lien. Manning v. Tuthill, 30 N. J. Eq. 29.

Waiver of Right to Security Given by Joint Debtor. — Where one of two principal debtors binds himself to the other to pay the whole debt and gives security therefor, a surety of the two principal debtors, if compelled to pay the debt, is entitled to the benefit of the security so given. But, if he takes a bond or other security from one of the principal debtors, he thereby waives his right to claim the benefit of security given by the other in pursuance of the agreement between the principals. Cornwell's Appeal, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 305.

9. Right Waived by Negligence and Laches. — Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 53, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204; Noble v. Turner, 69 Md. 519; Ocobock v. Baker, 52 Neb. 447, 66 Am. St. Rep. 519; Hutcheson v. Reash, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 96.

Subrogation Has Been Refused after a delay of one year; Gring's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 336. Of eight years; Matter of Goswiler, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 200. Of eleven years; Buffington v. Bernard, 90 Pa. St. 63. Of twenty years; Smith v. Thompson, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 112, 54 Am. Dec. 126.

The Right Has Been Enforced notwithstanding a delay of over four years; Darrow v. Summerhill, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 208. Of seven years; Kinhead v. Ryan, 64 N. J. Eq. 454. Of ten years, where no one was injured by the delay; Home Invest. Co. v. Clarkson, 15 S. Dak. 513.

10. Right Waived by Laches Prejudicial to Third Persons. — Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 53, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204; Thomas v. Stewart, 117 Ind.

Payment by a Surety Without Compulsion will not be held a waiver if payment by him might have been compelled.¹

The Acceptance of New Security by a Junior Incumbrancer will not operate as a waiver on his part of any right which he may have to subrogation.²

Acceptance of Indemnity from a Stranger will not destroy a surety's right to subrogation.³

Taking Other Security from Principal. — As a general rule a surety does not waive his right of subrogation by taking other security from his principal,⁴ unless the rights of third parties have intervened.⁵

Renewal of Note with Principal. — A surety does not waive his right of subrogation by renewing the note, on which he is bound, with his principal.⁶

The Doctrine of Estoppel in Pais Is Not Applicable to a claim of subrogation, unless the claimant has made false representations or has fraudulently concealed facts to the injury of him against whom the claim is asserted.⁷

XIII. ASSIGNMENT OF RIGHT. — The right of subrogation may be assigned by the party entitled thereto.⁸

XIV. ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT — 1. Equitable Jurisdiction. — The right of subrogation is equitable in its nature, and can only be enforced by a proceeding in equity in those jurisdictions where a separate equitable procedure is maintained.⁹ Thus it has been held that relief of this nature will not be granted in an action of ejectment,¹⁰ or other action to try title.¹¹ In some of the states, Ordinarily, to secure the benefit of a judgment lien against a co-security or co-accommodation indorser, the one paying the amount of the judgment should proceed by bill, suit, petition, or some proceeding in equity, wherein the equitable rights of the respective parties may be adjudicated and enforced. Lidderdale v. Robinson, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 594; Smith v. Rumsey, 33 Mich. 183; Furnold v. State Bank, 44 Mo. 336; Townsend v. Whitney, 75 N. Y. 425; Goodyear v. Watson, 14 Barb. (N. Subrogation Does Not Extend to the Form or Forum of the Remedy where the extent of the remedy is not affected by the form or forum. McDonald v. Assay, 37 Ill. App. 469, affirmed 130 Ill. 123.

10. Subrogation Not Enforced in Action of Ejectment. — Meyer v. Mintonye, 106 Ill. 414.

11. Subrogation Not Enforceable in Action to Try Title. — Allison v. Pattison, 96 Ala. 159.

however, the right is now held to be enforceable in courts of law by virtue of code provisions.¹

A Surety Who Has Failed to Establish His Claim at Law cannot enforce a right of subrogation in equity.²

2. Limitations. — The general rule is, that a surety must take steps to enforce his right of subrogation within the period prescribed as a limitation to the enforcement of simple contracts, for this merely equitable right will not be enforced at the expense of a legal one.³ In some of the states, if a surety pays a judgment against himself and his principal, and the fact of his suretyship appears in the record of the judgment, he may enforce the judgment at any time in which the plaintiff might enforce it; but if the fact of his suretyship does not so affirmatively appear, he must assert his right of subrogation within the period applicable to simple contracts.⁴

The Statute Begins to Run against a surety's right of subrogation from the time he pays the debt of his principal.⁵

1. Right Enforceable at Law under Georgia Code. — Oelrich v. Georgia R. Co., 73 Ga. 389.

In New York. — In Dunlop v. James, 174 N. Y. 411, it is said: "In modern times courts of law have dealt with subrogation as they would with assignments, and, when the right of action to which the plaintiff asks to be subrogated is a legal right of action, a court of law may treat a plaintiff who is entitled in equity to subrogation as an assignee, and allow him to maintain an action of a legal nature upon the right to which he claims to be subrogated." And see Boyd v. McDonough, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 39 How. Pa. (N. Y.) 389.

In North Carolina, since the adoption of the code, the right to subrogation must be asserted by a civil action commenced by service of a summons. Calvert v. Peebles, 82 N. Car. 334.

For the rule before the adoption of the code, see Allen v. Wood, 3 Ired. Eq. (38 N. Car.) 386.

Where a Court of Law Has Acquired Jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it will retain it and enforce full justice between the parties. German American Sav. Bank v. Fritz, 68 Wis. 390. And so of a court of equity. McDaniel v. Lee, 37 Mo. 304. See also Brown v. Hodgson, 4 Taunt. 189, where it is held that the principles of subrogation may be applied as well in an action at law as in equity.

2. Not Granted to Claimant Who Has Failed at Law. — Fink v. Mahaffy, 8 Watts (Pa.) 384; Hutcheson v. Reash, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 96.

A Defendant Who Pleads Title by Purchase will not be allowed, after judgment rendered against him, to set up title by subrogation. Weil v. Enterprise Ginney, etc., Co., 42 La. Ann. 192.

Qualification of Rule. — In Boevink v. Christiaanse, (Neb. 1903) 95 N. W. Rep. 652, it is said that the rule stated in the text applies only to sureties, or persons occupying the position of sureties.

Claimant in Same Position as Person from Whom Right Is Derived. — A person seeking subrogation to the rights of a vendor stands, with respect to the statute of limitations, in exactly the same position as the vendor would have occupied. Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504.

The Period of Limitation May Be Extended by the death of the principal debtor after payment by the surety. Roeder v. Keller, 135 Ind. 692.

Statute Governing Suits in Equity Applicable.

— A suit in equity by a surety to enforce his right of subrogation is governed by the ten years statute applicable to suits in equity generally. Zuellig v. Hemerlie, 60 Ohio St. 27, 71 Am. St. Rep. 707; Neal v. Nash, 23 Ohio St. 483. And see Boevink v. Christiaanse, (Neb. 1903) 95 N. W. Rep. 652; Pollock v. Wright, 15 S. Dak. 134.

Hudson*, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 57; Maxey v. Carter, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 521; Hammond v. Myers, 30 Tex. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 322; Darrow v. Summerhill, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 208.

In Cases of Fraud the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered. Gano v. Martin, 10 Kan. App. 384; Zinkeison v. Lewis, 63 Kan. 590.

Where the Debt Is a Judgment, the statute begins to run from the time of payment and not from the date of the judgment. Maxey v.

3. Claimant Required to Do Equity.—The right of subrogation being a creature of equity, the party claiming such right will be required to do equity before it will be enforced in his favor.⁴

SUBSCRIBE. (See also the titles SIGN—SIGNATURE, vol. 25, p. 1064; WILLS; and see SUBSCRIBER, post; SUBSCRIPTION, post; VERBAL AGREEMENTS (STATUTE OF FRAUDS).—To subscribe is defined to be to set one's hand to a writing.³ To subscribe is literally to "write under;" and is sometimes opposed to "sign," which does not necessarily imply that the signature is to be placed at the end of the instrument.³ The term also means to give consent to something written; to assent; to agree.⁴

Carter, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 521; Reeves v. Pulliam, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 153.

Where the Debt Paid Is a Mortgage, the statute begins to run from the maturity thereof and not from the date of payment. Fullerton v. Bailey, 17 Utah 85; Boevink v. Christiaanse, (Neb. 1903) 95 N. W. Rep. 652.

1. Claimant Required to Do Equity.—Swarts v. Siegel, (C. C. A.) 117 Fed. Rep. 13; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Eaton, 9 Kan. App. 678; Arnold v. Green, 116 N. Y. 366.

2. Subscribe.—Riley v. Riley, 36 Ala. 502, quoting Pridgen v. Pridgen, 13 Ired. (35 N. Car.) 260.

"Subscribe" and "Acknowledge" Distinguished. In Riley v. Riley, 36 Ala. 502, it was said: "So it has been held that the acknowledgment by a witness of a signature previously made is not a subscription within the meaning of the statute. Playne v. Scriven, 1 Rob. Ecc. 775. In that case an attesting witness, on the re-execution of the will, traced over his previous signature with a dry pen, and he was held not to have subscribed but only to have acknowledged his signature, which was not sufficient."

"Subscribe" and "Attest" Distinguished.—See ATTEST—ATTESTATION, vol. 3, p. 275, and see Smith v. Crotty, 112 Ga. 905; Matter of Downie, 42 Wis. 74. See also Chase v. Kirtledge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 49.

Printed Signature.—The word subscribe includes a printed signature. Herrick v. Morrill, 37 Minn. 250. Compare Ames v. Schurmeier, 9 Minn. 221; Vielle v. Osgood, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 130.

3. To Write Under.—American Surety Co. v. Worcester Cycle Mfg. Co., 100 Fed. Rep. 42; Coons v. Rigdon, 4 Colo. 282; Walker's Estate, 110 Cal. 387; Ashton v. Stoy, 96 Iowa 201; Davis v. Shields, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 357, reversing 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 327; James v. Paten, 6 N. Y. 13; Matter of Strong, 2 Connolly (N. Y.) 574; Wade v. State, 22 Tex. App. 257. See also Atty.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 14 Q. B. D. 667.

Thus, the requirement of a statute that certain instruments shall be subscribed by the parties is not complied with where their names appear, though written by themselves, only in the body of the instrument. Wild Cat Branch v. Ball, 45 Ind. 213 (a bond; see the title BONDS, vol. 4, p. 621); Stone v. Marvel, 45 N. H. 481 (an affidavit to a mortgage of personal property).

Same—Complaint for Larceny.—In Com. v. Barhight, 9 Gray (Mass.) 113, it was held that a complaint for larceny signed by the plaintiff below the description of the goods stolen and above the charge of larceny was not subscribed by the plaintiff.

Same—Execution or Attestation.—"To subscribe a writing, either as obligor or as attesting witness, is to sign the writing beneath or at the end or foot thereof." Soward v. Soward, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 129.

Same—Schedule Annexed to Instrument.—Where a statute required an instrument to be subscribed, it has been held that a schedule or other paper annexed to the instrument and referred to by the instrument to which it was annexed formed a part of such instrument, although such annexed paper was not itself subscribed. American Surety Co. v. Worcester Cycle Mfg. Co., 100 Fed. Rep. 41; Phelps v. Robbins, 40 Conn. 250; Newton v. Seaman's Friend Soc., 130 Mass. 91; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140; Baker's Appeal, 107 Pa. St. 390. See also Weeks v. Maillardet, 14 East 568; Belknap v. Wendell, 21 N. H. 175.

Same—Contra.—Under the English Statute of Wills and the statute of frauds, c. 3, § 5, which require the attesting witnesses to a will to subscribe the will, it has been held that the word subscribe is not to be taken "in its primary and strict sense" as meaning "to write under;" but that the statute is sufficiently complied with "by the witnesses who saw it executed by the testator immediately signing their names on any part of it at his request, with the intention of attesting it," this being in accordance with the secondary meaning of the word, as given by Johnson, "to attest by writing the name," and by Richardson, "to sign it (in witness or attestation); to assent or consent; to witness or attest." Roberts v. Phillips, 4 El. & Bl. 450, 82 E. C. L. 450.

4. Subscribe.—Ashton v. Stoy, 96 Iowa 201. To subscribe is "to agree in writing to furnish a sum of money or its equivalent for a designated purpose." Strong v. Eldridge, 8 Wash. 600.

Agreement to Subscribe.—As to an agreement to subscribe held to be equivalent to a subscription, see Henderson v. Lacon, L. R. 5 Eq. 249.

To Common Fund.—In Murray v. McHugh, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 166, it was said: "It is quite clear that these plaintiffs, with many other persons, put in their respective sums as contributions to a common fund for a designated purpose. The terms import this—'they subscribed,' 'they contributed'—all implying that the donations of each were parts, the whole of which were to form a common fund."

Payment and Promise to Pay.—In Burke v. Volume XXVII, SUBSCRIBER. — A subscriber is defined to be one who subscribes; one who contributes to an undertaking by subscribing; one who enters his name for a paper, book, map, or the like.⁴

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. (See also ATTEST — ATTESTATION, vol. 3, p. 273, and see the titles WILLS; WITNESSES.) — See note 2.

Lechmere, L. R. 6 Q. B. 304, it was said: "No doubt the word subscribed is used in two senses. Originally it meant only those who put their names to an agreement to pay money; but it has come to be used in the more popular sense of those who have paid the money."

In Thames Tunnel Co. v. Sheldon, 6 B. & C. 341, 13 E. C. L. 194, the word in an act of Parliament was held to be used in its original sense, and therefore to apply only to persons who had stipulated for a future advance of money.

A statement in the prospectus of a company inviting subscriptions to stock declared that two hundred thousand pounds thereof "have been already subscribed," whereas this amount had merely been allotted in payment to contractors. It was held that this was a fraudulent misrepresentation, as the use of the word subscribed implied an agreement under which there would be a liability to pay, and so was a representation that there was a responsibility behind a large portion of the capital. Arnison v. Smith, 41 Ch. D. 348.

To subscribe for stock. — The word subscribe, in contracts for subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, "has a definite technical sense, including in it the idea of a promise to pay the amount subscribed in the manner agreed upon." Cheraw, etc., R. Co. v. White, 14 S. Car. 62. See also Busey v. Hooper, 35 Md. 15; Strong v. Eldridge, 8 Wash. 600. In Sagory v. Dubois, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 493, it was said: "To 'subscribe for' shares in one of the ordinary significations of the word subscribe is to promise to give the thing subscribed for, or to contribute to the undertaking accordingly." See also the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, vol. 26, p. 902 et seq.

Power to subscribe to railroad stock. — In English v. Chicot County, 26 Ark. 454, it was held that an act authorizing a county to subscribe for railroad stock did not authorize the county to issue bonds of the county in payment thereof, that is, to pledge the municipal credit. See also the titles COUNTIES, vol. 7, p. 938; MUNICIPAL AID, vol. 20, p. 1102.

But in Seybert v. Pittsburg, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 273, where the authority was to subscribe to the capital stock of a railroad company "as fully as any individual," the court held that as an individual could have given his bond for the subscription by agreement with the company, so could the city.

Subscribed Capital Stock. — Civ. Code Cal., § 309, provides that directors shall create no debts beyond the subscribed capital stock of the corporations. In construing this provision in Smith v. Ferries, etc., R. Co., (Cal. 1897) 51 Pac. Rep. 714, the court said: "We think that any stock issued for a valuable consideration, at least for any of those valuable considerations named in section 359 of the Civil Code, is 'subscribed capital stock,' as the phrase is used in this chapter of the code." See also the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, vol. 26, p. 825.

Levy on Capital Stock instead of on Subscribed Capital Stock. — In San Joaquin Land, etc., Co. v. Beecher, 101 Cal. 81, it was said: "Our Civil Code, section 335, prescribes the form of a notice to be given to stockholders of the levy of an assessment, which form was followed in the present case. In describing the assessment it describes it as being 'levied upon the capital stock of the corporation,' instead of upon the subscribed capital stock. The legislature had authority to designate the form of notice to be given, and having done so, and the secretary having given the notice thus provided, it was sufficient." See also the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, vol. 26, p. 920.

1. Subscriber. — Ashton v. Stoy, 96 Iowa 201, quoting Webst. Dict.

Same — Meaning One Who Has Promised to Advance Money as Distinguished from One Who Has Already Paid. — See Thames Tunnel Co. v. Sheldon, 9 Dowl. & R. 278, 6 B. & C. 341, 13 E. C. L. 194, and the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, vol. 26, p. 893, note 3. And see SUBSCRIBE, ante.

Newspaper. — In Ashton v. Stoy, 96 Iowa 201, it was said: "A person to whom a paper is sent without his knowledge or consent, either express or implied, is not a subscriber, within the meaning of the statute."

Articles of Incorporation. — A statute provided that "the persons who have subscribed and all persons who shall from time to time become stockholders" should be a body corporate. It was held that the word subscriber included the parties to a preliminary subscription and the subscribers to the articles of incorporation. It was further held that it was not contemplated that the original subscribers would fail to subscribe the articles, therefore no distinction was made between these different classes of subscribers and no provision was expressly made for such an exceptional case. Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 Mich. 130. See also Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 Mich. 389.

Subscriber and Stockholder. — That something more than a mere subscription to stock is necessary to render the subscriber a stockholder, see McComb v. Barcelona Apartment Assoc., (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 549, and see the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, vol. 26, p. 808, especially p. 894 et seq. See also this title generally for a full discussion of the relation between subscribers and stockholders and the rights and liabilities of each.

2. Subscribing Witness. — A subscribing witness has been defined to be "one who was present when the instrument was executed, and who at that time, at the request or with the assent of the party, subscribed his name to it as a witness of the execution." Tate v. Lawrence, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 510, quoting 1 Greenleaf on SUBSCRIPTION. (See also SUBSCRIBE, ante; SUBSCRIBER, ante, — See note 1.

Evidence, § 569a. But see as to the English doctrine as to witnesses of wills, SUBSCRIBE, ante.

In Smith v. Crotty, 112 Ga. 906, it was said: "What is a subscribing witness? Clearly, one who writes his name under an attesting clause."

1. Subscription. (See also the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS, vol. 26, p. 808.) — A stockholder's subscription is his obligation to contribute to the capital stock. Patterson v. Lynde, 106 U. S. 521; Hardy v. Norfolk Mfg. Co., 80 Va. 416; Lewis v. Glenn, 84 Va. 979.

Agreement to Subscribe. — A subscription to the capital of a company by certain persons has been defined as "the putting down their names to a contract, by which they bind themselves to contribute to the extent of the number of shares for which they put down their names." Burke v. Lechmere, L. R. 6 Q. B. 303, citing Thames Tunnel Co. v. Sheldon, 6 B. & C. 348, 13 E. C. L. 194.

Particular Mann r. — If by statute a subscription is required to be made in a particular manner, the prescribed manner must be observed. Atty.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 14 Q. B. D. 667, 54 L. J. Q. B. 205.

Mark. (See also MARK, vol. 19, p. 1137, and see the title SIGN — SIGNATURE, vol. 25, p. 1064.) — Subscription includes mark. Breene v. McCrary, 52 Ala. 154; Harrison v. Simons, 55 Ala. 515; Alabama Warehouse Co. v. Lewis, 56 Ala. 516; Elston v. Roap, 133 Ala. 336; Bickley v. Keenan, 60 Ala. 295; Matter of Guilfoyle, 96 Cal. 600; *Meazels v. I. DEFINITION. — A subscription is a written contract by which one engages to contribute a sum of money for a designated purpose.¹

II. FORM AND REQUISITES. — The Subscription Paper Must Contain a Promise to give a specified sum of money for a designated purpose² authorized by law.³

Date. — The absence of the date on a subscription paper does not render a subscription invalid.⁴

Payee. — The person to whom the offer is made need not be named in the subscription paper.¹ A subscription payable to whoever performs the acts named in the subscription paper is like a note payable to bearer, and whoever performs the work in accordance with the subscription is the payee.²

Expression of Consideration. — The consideration on which the subscription is made need not be expressed in the instrument.³

Delivery. — To give a subscription effect it has been said that it must be delivered to some party who is willing to and does accept the proposition, and who will perform or secure the performance of the conditions therein imposed;⁴ but this would appear to be true only in case the offer contained in it is intended not for any person who shall perform the conditions, but is addressed only to the particular person to whom it shall be delivered.

III. CONSIDERATION — 1. In General. — A subscription, like any other promise or offer, requires a consideration to support it, either of profit to the party promising or of loss to the other party.⁵

2. Moral Obligation. — A voluntary subscription will not be sustained by the moral obligation alone which underlies it. Unless there is a legal consideration the question of its performance rests wholly with the conscience.⁶

3. Subsequent Consideration. — A subscription invalid when signed for want of consideration may be made valid and binding by a consideration arising subsequently between the subscribers and the beneficiary.⁷

4. Bestowing Labor and Incurring Liability. — The consideration is sufficient where, before notice of the withdrawal of the subscription,⁸ and on the faith of the subscriber's promise, money or labor is expended and liability incurred.⁹

But see Bridgewater Academy v. Gilbert, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 579, 13 Am. Dec. 457, wherein it is held that the beginning to provide materials on the faith of the subscription paper alone is not sufficient to show that expenses have been incurred at the implied request of the subscriber.

Where Nothing Is Done or Attempted upon the invitation or request of the subscribers or otherwise than as individuals interested in promoting the general object in view, and no liability is incurred on the strength of the subscriptions upon request of the subscribers, there is no consideration. Presbyterian Church v. Cooper, 112 N. Y. 517, 8 Am. St. Rep. 767.

Borrowing Money on the faith of the subscriptions is a sufficient consideration. M. E. Church v. Garvey, 53 Ill. 401, 5 Am. Rep. 51; United Presb. Church v. Baird, 60 Iowa 237.

Expense Incurred on Faith of Any Particular Subscription is not necessary. Capelle v. Trinity M. E. Church, 11 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 536, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,392.

1. Compliance with Terms of Subscription. — Illinois. — Thompson v. Mercer County, 40 Ill. 379; Miller v. Ballard, 46 Ill. 377; Kentucky Baptist Education Soc. v. Carter, 72 Ill. 247.

An Obligation Imposed by Law on the Payee to apply a fund to carrying out the charitable and benevolent purpose of an institution and the intention of the subscriber furnishes sufficient consideration.¹

6. Mutual Promises.—It has been held that when several persons promise to contribute to a common object desired by all, the promise of each may be a good consideration for the promise of others;² but this holding has been severely criticised by some courts, wherein it has been held that the doctrine is unsound, and that the subscription cannot be enforced unless the promisee has, in reliance on the promise, done something, and it is not enough that some one has been led to subscribe by the subscription of others.³

Acceptance of a Subscription implies a promise to hold and appropriate funds subscribed in conformity with the terms and objects of the subscription, and thus mutual and independent promises are made, which constitute a legal and sufficient consideration for each other.¹

IV. ACCEPTANCE — 1. In General. — To make a subscription binding it must be accepted, as any other promise or offer, and if this is not done within a reasonable time the subscription is a mere offer and cannot be enforced.²

After the Death of a Subscriber the proposal is not open to acceptance.³

2. Express Acceptance. — Where the terms of the subscription stipulate that an express acceptance is required, such acceptance is a prerequisite to the validity of the contract.⁴

3. Implied Acceptance. — In the absence of a stipulation in the subscription requiring an acceptance in express terms, no formal acceptance is necessary. The assumption of a liability or obligation, or the doing of some unrequired act such as the expending of money or labor in accordance with and upon the faith of the subscription, is a sufficient acceptance.⁵

V. CONDITIONS — 1. In General. — A subscription may be conditional. If particular terms are prescribed, these terms in themselves are conditions precedent, and the subscriber is bound upon compliance therewith and not otherwise.¹

A Substantial Rather than a Literal Compliance with the conditions is usually sufficient. But at least a substantial performance is essential.²

Performance by Transferee. — If the beneficiary abandons the purposes for which the subscription was made, the subscription cannot be transferred to other parties for the purpose of fulfilling the agreement. Mann v. O'Neil, 29 Wash. 115.

Illustrations — Sufficient Compliance. — The condition of a subscription that a certain amount should be subscribed and "well secured" by a

• Time for Performance. — Unless the time within which the condition must be complied with is stipulated, the rule is that performance must be within a reasonable time.¹ But where it is expressly stipulated that performance must be complete on a stated day, then time is essential and there must be a compliance at the time specified.²

2. Condition that Certain Amount Be Subscribed. — Where the condition is that a certain amount be subscribed, the subscriber's liability is fixed when the condition is performed, and it is immaterial that the requisite amount is secured on different papers,³ that the fund is afterwards misapplied,⁴ or that some of the subscriptions are on various conditions acceded to by the payee.⁵

Bona Fide Subscriptions Are Essential, and the requisite amount cannot be obtained on subscriptions which cannot be collected or which the payee agrees not to collect.⁶

3. Waiver of Conditions. — The subscriber may waive the conditions in his subscription, either expressly or by acts from which the law will imply a waiver.⁷

VI. PARTIES TO SUBSCRIPTION — Subscriber. — The party making the subscription must be a person or an association capable of entering into a binding contract.⁸

stated time, is substantially complied with where the proper amount is subscribed and secured only by the signatures of responsible subscribers. Somers v. Miner, 9 Conn. 458.

A condition that a building shall be erected within eighteen months is complied with if within the required time the walls of the building are up and the material on the ground to complete it. Johnston v. Ewing Female University, 35 Ill. 518.

A subscription for the erection of a court house on the condition that the same shall be donated to the county is sufficiently complied with when the building is leased to the county for ninety-nine years without payment of rent. Hall v. Virginia, 91 Ill. 535.

A subscription for the support of beds in a hospital for the use of soldiers, "but always for use when there are no soldier applicants," is complied with when a ward is set apart with the requisite number of beds to which an application in behalf of a soldier is never refused. Cottage Hospital v. Merrill, 92 Iowa 649.

Where a subscription is payable in part when the walls of a building shall be completed there is a sufficient completion when such walls are so far completed as to receive the roof. Worcester Medical Inst. v. Harding, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 285.

A stipulation that the subscription shall be paid to the treasurer of a board of trustees to be elected by a convention at a given time and place, is sufficiently complied with if the convention elects the trustees at another place, on a subsequent day, to which such convention has been adjourned. Wayne, etc., Collegiate Institute v. Greenwood, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 72.

Insufficient Compliance. — A condition that a school building be a certain size is not complied with where a building materially less in size and capacity is erected. Sult v. Warren School Tp., 8 Ind. App. 655.

A condition that a church be erected on a particular tract of land is not complied with by the erection of the church on a different tract. Rothenberger v. Glick, 22 Ind. App. 288.

A subscription on condition that a designated corporation locate at a certain place is not fulfilled where the officers of the corporation having acquired the stock change the business to a partnership and remove to such place. Keys v. Weaver, 95 Iowa 13.

Payee. — As a general rule the payee need not be designated in the subscription paper or known at the time the subscription is made.¹ It is not even necessary that the payee be in existence when the subscription paper is signed.² Where the payee is an institution it must be authorized by statute to receive subscriptions.³

VII. NATURE AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY. — The liability of the subscribers on an ordinary subscription paper is several, and neither is liable beyond the terms of his own subscription.⁴

VIII. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT. — The contract evidenced by the subscription, not being essentially different from contracts in general, is to be construed by the same rules of interpretation.⁵

IX. ACTIONS — 1. Enforcement of Contract. — As soon as the payee has completed his contract in accordance with the terms of the subscription paper, his right of action against each of the subscribers for the respective amounts subscribed becomes complete.⁶ And where the time fixed for payment is to

Payment in Advance. — The liability of a subscriber is not affected by the fact that the other subscribers paid the respective amounts subscribed by them in advance of the time designated. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Neely, 64 Tex. 344.

Liability for Acts of Co-signors. — Where a person signs a subscription paper agreeing to pay a certain amount toward the attainment of a certain purpose, he is not bound by the action of his co-signors who subsequently held a meeting without notice to him, without his attendance, and without his subsequent recognition of their acts. Curry v. Rogers, 21 N. H. 255.

Where a Building Is Completed for a Very Different Purpose from that named in the subscription paper the subscribers are not liable. Worcester Medical Inst. v. Bigelow, 6 Gray (Mass.) 498.

Liability for Acts Not Contemplated. — Where a committee appointed by the subscribers does acts not contemplated by the parties to the subscription list the subscribers are not bound. Darnell v. Lyon, 85 Tex. 455; McFarland v. Lyon, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 586.

Failure of an Agreement Among the Subscribers does not affect their liability to third persons. Davis v. Johnson, 49 Mo. App. 240.

5. Condition Construed — When Building Inclosed. — Snell v. M. E. Church Soc., 58 Ill. 290 (stated under Inclosure, vol. 16, p. 145).

Condition or Mere Recital. — A subscription on condition that the trustees permanently locate the buildings of a university, "which are to cost not less than $100,000," expresses but a single condition — the location. The stipulation as to cost is a mere statement. Judson University v. Kinkaid, 50 Kan. 369.

Amount Determined Indirectly. — A subscription reading, "I agree to give a lease of my house on Genesee street, for three years, * * * which at present rent is $516," is in substance a cash subscription to that amount, or at least to the full rent of the premises for three years. Syracuse First Baptist Soc. v. Robinson, 21 N. Y. 234.

"I Agree to Subscribe" Construed to Mean "I Agree to Pay." — Strong v. Eldridge, 8 Wash. 595.

Additional Moneys paid to the object of the subscription by one of the subscribers should be regarded as a gratuity. Whitsitt v. Preemption Presb. Church, 110 Ill. 125.

arrive or may arrive before the time fixed for performance, an action may be brought for the money or other consideration before the performance.¹

Notice and Demand are not prerequisites to enforcement of the subscription unless it is so stipulated in the contract of subscription.²

Where Money or Labor Is Expended. — Where money is expended or work done on the faith of a subscription the amount of such subscription, or such portion of it as will be equal to the subscriber's portion of the expense incurred, may be recovered.³ But if no money has been expended and no act done as a consideration or upon the faith of the promise, there can be no recovery.⁴

Who May Bring Action. — The Payee named in the subscription paper, or the party subsequently selected to receive the money, may bring an action to enforce the contract of subscription.⁵

The Party Complying with the Terms of the subscription paper becomes the real party in interest and may maintain an action against the subscribers.⁶

The Assignee of the subscription paper who receives such paper as payment for work done in carrying out the terms of the subscription may maintain an action in his own name.⁷

The Co-subscribers may maintain the action where the subscribers have agreed to make up a specified sum and where the withdrawal of one would increase the amount to be paid by the others.¹

Extent of Recovery. — If all the money subscribed is necessarily used in securing the thing designed, the recovery will be limited by the amount subscribed. But if the amount necessarily expended was less than the whole amount subscribed, the recovery will then be limited to the amount so expended and will be divided among the subscribers pro rata.²

2. Recovery of Money Paid on Subscription. — If the subscriber pays the amount of his subscription and the payee fails to comply with the terms of the contract the sum paid may be recovered.³

3. Evidence. — Evidence is properly admitted for the purpose of showing what was the general understanding among the persons who signed the subscription paper,⁴ and where the paper does not state the consideration or states it incorrectly the real consideration may be shown by evidence aliunde.⁵

The Burden Is on the Payee to establish under the terms of the subscription that he has substantially complied with the conditions precedent. It is not necessary for the payee to prove a literal compliance in the performance of the conditions precedent, but it is incumbent upon him to show a substantial compliance with such terms.⁶

X. RESCISSION. — A gratuitous subscription, being a mere offer, is susceptible of revocation at any time until it is acted upon.⁷ But after acceptance of and compliance with the terms of the subscription or after liabilities and expenses have been incurred on the faith of the promise there can be no revocation.⁸

Death or Insanity of Subscriber. — If the subscriber dies or becomes insane before his offer is accepted it is thereby revoked and cannot by any subsequent act showing acceptance be made good as against his estate.⁹ Conversely, where

SUBSEQUENTLY. — See note 3.

1. Subscription Supported by Consideration. — Waters v. Union Trust Co., 129 Mich. 640.

2. Subsequent Action. — The English Married Woman's Property Act of 1874 enacted that when a husband after marriage had a judgment bona fide recovered against him in any action brought under the act to recover a debt of the wife contracted before marriage, then to the extent of such judgment "the husband shall not in any subsequent action be liable." It was held that the words "any subsequent action" meant any action commenced subsequently to the time of bringing the action in which judgment had been recovered, and not merely any action commenced subsequently to the recovery of the judgment. Fear v. Castle, 8 Q. B. D. 380.

Subsequent Conditions. — See the title CONDITIONS, vol. 6, p. 499.

Subsequent Creditors. (See also the titles FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES, vol. 14, p. 210; RECORDING ACTS, vol. 24, p. 73; and see CREDITOR, vol. 8, p. 242, note.) — In McGhee v. Wells, 57 S. Car. 280, it was said: "The term 'subsequent creditors' means creditors whose debts were contracted subsequent to the deed in question. King v. Fraser, 23 S. Car. 543; Carraway v. Carraway, 27 S. Car. 576; Armstrong v. Carwile, 56 S. Car. 471. It follows, of course, that the entry of judgment subsequent to the deed and its record will not constitute the judgment creditor a subsequent creditor, unless the debt upon which the judgment is based arose subsequent to the deed in question."

Subsequent Negligence. — In Holwerson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 157 Mo. 234, it was said: "'Prior' and subsequent are very nearly, and often exactly, equivalent to 'proximate' and 'remote.' * * * 'Subsequent negligence' means ordinarily, in the judge's opinion, the negligence that did the mischief, which is more usually known as negligence which is a proximate cause."

Subsequent Purchaser. (See also the titles FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES, vol. 14, p. 210; PURCHASERS FOR VALUE AND WITHOUT NOTICE, vol. 23, p. 472; RECORDING ACTS, vol. 24, p. 73.) — A subsequent purchaser in good faith is one who buys without notice and without intent to defraud creditors or other persons of their demands. Westheimer v. Goodkind, 24 Mont. 90.

So a "subsequent purchaser" has been held to mean subsequent bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration. Van Rensselaer v. Clark, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 25, 31 Am. Dec. 280.

Same—Chattel Mortgage. (See also the title CHATTEL MORTGAGES, vol. 5, p. 1013.) — A statute provided that mortgages of personal property not followed by a change of possession should be void as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith unless recorded. In construing this provision the court said: "It seems that a 'subsequent purchaser in good faith' * * * is one who acquires title to mortgaged property by contract with the mortgagor, or his vendee, after the execution of the mortgage, and without notice thereof." Farmers, etc., Bank v. Anthony, 39 Neb. 343.

In Sylvester v. The Ship Gordon Gauthier, 4 Can. Exch. 354, it was held that the mortgagee of a ship who took possession under his mortgage before the institution of an action in rem for the recovery of a claim which constituted a maritime lien did not thereby become a subsequent purchaser within the meaning of the Maritime Court Act, § 14, subsec. 5, as against the lienholder, although the lien might have arisen since the date of the mortgage.

Same—Recording Acts—Purchaser from Grantor Only. — Under a recording act providing that deeds of trust or mortgage should be effective as to subsequent purchasers from the time of delivery to the clerk to be recorded, the phrase "subsequent purchasers" was held to mean purchasers from the grantor directly, and not purchasers at execution sale. Henson v. Downing, 24 Miss. 115.

Under an act which provided that conveyances of real estate should be void as against a "subsequent purchaser" in good faith and for valuable consideration whose conveyance should be first recorded, it was held that a "subsequent purchaser" meant a subsequent purchaser from the same grantor. Smith v. Williams, 44 Mich. 244.

Time. — The word subsequent in a recording act has been held to refer to the time of recording, and not to the date of the instrument. Doyle v. Teas, 5 Ill. 252.

3. Subsequently. — Under the United States Bankruptcy Act of 1867, it was provided that a discharge should be invalid if the bankrupt, being a merchant or tradesman, had not "subsequently to the passage of this act" kept proper books of account. In In re Rosenfield, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,058, it was said that the word subsequently in this provision meant "at a later time" or "afterwards," in distinction from "since," which "includes the whole period between an event and the present time," and consequently that it was sufficient to show that a bankrupt within the clause had at any time after the passage of the act neglected to keep such books. But in In re Cretiew, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,390, the distinction between the words "since" and subsequently, while admitted in the abstract was not considered applicable to the construction of a legislative enactment, where "most words not technical in their character are used in their general and popular sense, without nice discrimination." See also SINCE, vol. 25, p. 1068.

SUBSERVIENT.—"Subservient" is defined to mean useful, as an instrument to promote a purpose; serving to promote some end.¹

SUBSTANCE. (See also PURPORT, vol. 23, p. 527.)—That which is essential; used in opposition to "form."² The term has also the meaning of estate, property, etc.³

SUBSTANTIAL. (See also ILLUSIVE, vol. 15, p. 1019.)—See note 5.

1. Subservient.—People v. Graceland Cemetery Co., 86 Ill. 338, in which case a charter exempting from taxation property "subservient to burial uses" was construed. See the case stated under the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 344.

2. Subsisting—Set-off.—In construing the statute now embodied in Civ. Code Ala. (1896) § 3732 (stated in the title SET-OFF, RECOURSE, AND COUNTERCLAIM, vol. 25, p. 515, note 3), the court said: "It is thus shown that a debt against which the statutory bar has run is in one sense a subsisting demand. We hold, however, that the word subsisting, as employed in the statute we are construing, has a more confined meaning, and that the precise object the legislature had in view was that demands held by defendants when the adversary plaintiff's right of action accrued, if then free from the infirmity of age, should not afterwards lose their availability as a defense by mere lapse of time." Washington v. Timberlake, 74 Ala. 263.

3. Substance.—Bouv. L. Dict., followed in Douglass v. Beasley, 40 Ala. 142; Com. v. Borden, 61 Pa. St. 276. See also Briggs v. Greenlee, Minor (Ala.) 124, and see FORM, vol. 13, p. 1115; MATTER, vol. 20, p. 234.

Substance of Testimony.—In Com. v. Borden, 61 Pa. St. 276, in construing the rule that upon certiorari the substance of the testimony is to be recorded and returned with the writ, the court said: "Had the justice merely set forth what he considered was the effect or the result of the evidence, it would have been insufficient according to some of the authorities. * * * But he gives the substance of the testimony itself. 'Substance,' says Webster in his unabridged dictionary, is the 'essential part, the main or material part.'"

Plea in Short.—In Pollard v. Stanton, 5 Ala. 453, it was held that an agreement to take a plea in short "must be understood as a mere waiver of form, and not of substance; it must convey some precise and definite idea of the matter of defense, and must be sufficient in substance."

Substance in Sense of Substance in Pleading.—Wells v. Woodley, 5 How. (Miss.) 493.

"Substance and Effect."—See EFFECT, vol. 10, p. 445.

4. Property or Estate.—Thus, upon the construction of a will, it was said by Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Hogan v. Jackson, 1 Cowp. 307: "What is substance? It is every property a man has. So, in the statute 4 & 5 P. & M., c. 8, for the punishment of such as shall take away maidens that be inheritors, the word substance is made use of, and means worldly wealth."

All Articles Composed of Mineral Substances—Revenue Law.—See Dingelstedt v. U. S., (C. C. A.) 91 Fed. Rep. 113.

5. Substantial Damages.—See the title DAMAGES, vol. 8, p. 542.

Substantial Right.—A substantial right has been defined as one involving a legal right, such a right as may be enforced and protected by law. Fox v. Keister, 8 Ohio Dec. 638; Armstrong v. Herancourt Brewing Co., 53 Ohio St. 467. See also Missionary Soc. v. Ely, 56 Ohio St. 405; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Sloan, 31 Ohio St. 1.

Statutes Regulating Appeals frequently require that, to be appealable, an order must affect a substantial right. This means only that the order "must affect a substantial interest—a matter of substance and not of mere form." Martin v. Windsor Hotel Co., 70 N. Y. 103. See also Rathbun v. Ingersoll, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 213; Morehouse v. Yeager, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 50; People v. New York Cent. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 421; Livermore v. Bainbridge, 56 N. Y. 72, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 436.

"By substantial right," in this connection, "is to be understood such rights only as are to be determined as pure questions of law; such only as can be demanded as the strict legal right of the party." Foot v. Lathrop, 41 N. Y. 361.

"The phrases 'involving the merits' and 'affecting a substantial right' relate only to the subject-matter of the litigation, and not to mere matters of practice which cannot affect that, whether regulated by statute or not." Rahn v. Gunnison, 12 Wis. 531, holding that the attestation of the summons in an action did not affect a substantial right.

Substantial and Vested Rights. (See also the title VESTED RIGHTS.)—In Day v. Madden, 9 Colo. App. 475, it was held that "the right to a writ of attachment, when it accrued and was exercised while the statute was in force permitting it, gave to the attachment plaintiff a right which may be called 'vested' or substantial, at pleasure, but nevertheless a right which could be neither taken away nor destroyed by the repeal of the statute under which it had been regularly acquired."

Substantial Wrong—Ground for New Trial.—In Reg. v. Hamilton, 2 Can. Crim. Cas. (Manitoba) 390, it was held, where a deposition of a witness, afterwards deceased, taken at an inquiry before a magistrate had been improperly admitted in evidence at the trial, and was of such a nature that it must have influenced the jury in the verdict, that its improper admission was a "substantial wrong" (Crim. Code, § 746) entitling the accused to a new trial.

In an action for libel the judge misdirected the jury in favor of the plaintiff upon a material part of the libel, and the jury gave a verdict for large damages. It was held that since the assessment of damages was a peculiar province of the jury, and since the jury had not the defendant's real case submitted to it and might, in assessing the damages, have been influenced by the misdirection, there had been “a substantial wrong and miscarriage” (order xxxix, rule 6, Supreme Ct.) entitling the defendant to a new trial. Bray v. Ford, (1896) A. C. 44.

SUBSTANTIALLY.—The term “substantially” means really; truly; essentially; competently;¹ in a substantial manner; in substance.²

Substantial Compliance—Iron-safe Clause in Fire-insurance Policy.—See the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 356.

Substantial and Workmanlike.—A building contract provided that the work was to be done in a substantial and workmanlike manner. It was held that what amounted to doing the work in a plain, substantial, and workmanlike manner was a question exclusively for the jury. The court said: “To do a thing in a plain, substantial, and workmanlike manner would imply that it should be perfectly done for the character of the job contemplated.” Smith v. Clark, 58 Mo. 146. See also Leeds v. Little, 42 Minn. 414; Elliott v. Caldwell, 43 Minn. 357; and see the title WORKING CONTRACTS.

1. Substantially.—Cheesman v. Hart, 42 Fed. Rep. 90.

2. Hardin County v. Wells, 108 Iowa 174.

Substantially and Fully.—In Hardin County v. Wells, 108 Iowa 174, it is said: “To say that a given sum is ‘substantially, if not wholly,’ paid is not the equivalent of a statement that it is fully paid.”

Substantially Built Dwelling House.—See Johnson v. Smart, 6 Jur. N. S. 815. This was a suit for specific performance, the defense being a misrepresentation as to the house being substantially built.

Substantially Changing Claim.—In Dougan v. Turner, 51 Minn. 330, it was said: “No error is assigned or shown in receiving the evidence going to establish the fact as found by the court, and it is conceded that the evidence tended to establish that fact. Hence, in allowing the amendment ‘conforming the pleading * * * to the fact proved’ (Gen. Stat. 1878, c. 66, § 124) there was no error. The change thus made cannot be deemed to have substantially changed the claim, within the meaning of that word in the statute cited.” See generally the title AMENDMENTS, 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 578 et seq.

Substantially Completed.—The term “substantially completed” when used in reference to a railroad has been held to apply to a railroad the roadbed of which is in such condition that it lacks but twenty per cent. of completion. Louisiana, etc., R. Co. v. State Board of Appraisers, 108 La. 14.

Substantially Described—Substantially as Set Forth. (See also the title PATENTS, vol. 22, p. 352.)—In Hobbs v. Beach, 180 U. S. 399, it was held that the words “substantially as described or set forth,” in a claim for a patent, “do not limit the patentee to the exact mechanism described in his specification or prevent recovery against infringers who have adapted mechanical equivalents for such mechanism.” As to the meaning of these words when used in this connection, see also Seymour v. Osborne,

11 Wall. (U. S.) 516; Mitchell v. Tilghman, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 287; Corn Planter Patent, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 181; Lee v. Pillsbury, 49 Fed. Rep. 747; Morley Sewing Mach. Co. v. Lancaster, 129 U. S. 263; Westinghouse v. Boyden Power Brake Co., 170 U. S. 537; Boyden Power-Brake Co. v. Westinghouse Air-Brake Co., (C. C. A.) 70 Fed. Rep. 826, wherein it was said: “The phrase ‘substantially as set forth’ is technical, and is equivalent to saying ‘by the means described in the text of the inventor’s application for letters patent, as illustrated by the drawings, diagrams, and models which accompany the application.’ These words limit the general terms of the specification which set out the function performed by the invention, and confine the inventor’s rights to his own special means of performing the function.”

Substantially Identical.—In Com. v. Stone, 103 Mass. 421, it was held, where the jury in a criminal case found that the name of the person upon whom the offense was committed was substantially identical with the name charged in the indictment, that this was sufficient.

Substantially in the Same Condition means that there is no material change. In re Boone, 83 Fed. Rep. 962.

Substantially Naphtha.—Upon the trial of one charged under a Massachusetts statute with keeping naphtha and offering it for sale, the trial judge instructed the jurors that they were to decide whether the article alleged to have been offered for sale “was substantially naphtha.” The court said: “The instruction excepted to was correct, the word substantially being clearly used as meaning ‘really or essentially.’” Com. v. Wentworth, 118 Mass. 442.

Privy Examination of Married Women. (See also the title ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, vol. 1, p. 483.)—A statute provided that the certificates of privy examination of married women should be “substantially as follows,” giving a form. It was said that “the word substantially is used in this connection, as it often is, in the sense of comprehending all of the form given that is necessary or essential.” Lineberger v. Tidwell, 104 N. Car. 513.

Substantially True Copy.—In Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 426, it was said: “‘Substantially a true copy’ does not mean a full and exact copy, but rather a copy of the material and essential parts, or an abstract of them.”

3. Substantive Felony.—State v. Ricker, 29 Me. 89, following Webst. Dict. In this case, decided under the Maine statute allowing an accessory before the fact to be indicted and convicted of substantive felony, the court said: “A substantive felony is that which depends upon itself, and is not dependent upon another felony, which is established by the conviction of the one who committed it alone.” And it was held that the accessory may be indicted and convicted without reference to the conviction of the principal, although the guilt of the principal must be shown. See also the title ACCESSORY, vol. 1, p. 263.

SUBSTANTIVE REQUIREMENT. — See FORM—FORMAL—FORMALITIES, vol. 13, p. 1117.

SUBSTITUTE — SUBSTITUTION. (See also DEVICE, vol. 9, p. 448.) — A substitute is a person or thing put in the place of another person or thing.¹

SUBSTITUTED COMPLAINT. — "A 'substituted complaint' ex vi termini imports a complaint filed to take the place of that previously filed, and excludes such previous complaint from the record as an operative pleading in the cause."²

Substitution of Records. — See the title LOST PAPERS AND RECORDS, vol. 19, p. 555 et seq.

Substituted Security. — See City of London Brewery Co. v. Inland Revenue Com'rs, (1899) 1 Q. B. 121.

2. Substituted Complaint. — Britz v. Johnson, 65 Ind. 562.

3. Subvert. — Where the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had subverted the water of a spring, it was held that the allegation did not "give the defendant any notice that he would be called upon to answer any charge of corrupting the water in the spring. Subvert has no such natural signification as applied to material objects like a vein or stream of water." Chesley v. King, 74 Me. 170, 43 Am. Rep. 569.

4. Succeeding. — The word succeeding is susceptible of different significations, and is used in different senses, with an exclusive or inclusive meaning, according to the subject to which it is applied. Sands v. Lyon, 18 Conn. 29. See also Webster v. French, 12 Ill. 304.

5. Successful Party. (See also PREVAILING PARTY, vol. 22, p. 1292, and see the title COSTS, 5 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 100.) — A Wisconsin statute provided that in case of a new trial on appeal, costs should be allowed the successful party. It was held that the words successful party had reference to the party finally recovering judgment, without reference to the question whether it was more or less than that rendered by the justice. Smithbeck v. Larson, 18 Wis. 183; Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Thorson, 21 Wis. 35; Schoeffel v. Hinze, 47 Wis. 648.

In Cole v. Richmond Min. Co., 18 Nev. 124, it was said: "A party, however, may be successful in a suit without winning everything that is asked for. The question whether a party is successful or not depends upon the particular facts of each case; upon the issues raised; upon the contest made."

Successful Claimant. — In Smith v. Laumeier, 12 Mo. App. 546, affirmed 84 Mo. 673, it was held that the successful claimant mentioned in the Missouri Revenue Law of 1872, § 220, was one who claimed adversely to the demands of the revenue law, and not one claiming under a subsequent tax sale.

Successful Vaccination. — In Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World v. Woodruff, 80 Miss. 554, it was said: "We think it plainly inferable from the terms of the application for insurance in this case that the association did not use the phrase 'successful vaccination' in the sense of an entire immunity from smallpox. * * * 'Successful vaccination' carries the idea merely of the production upon the person vaccinated of such symptoms or manifestations as are usually produced by such operation when considered effective. The eruption produced by the inoculation, with its accompanying characteristics, is the only certain evidence that vaccination has taken or is successful. That 'successful vaccination' only means that the virus has taken upon the person inoculated, is supported by the Century Dictionary (word 'Vaccination')."

I. DEFINITIONS — Succession. — Succession, in the civil law, denotes the transmission of the rights and obligations of a deceased person to his heir or heirs.¹ The term is employed in the statutes of some of the states to denote the devolution of title to property under the statutes of descents and distributions. It is proposed in this title to deal with what is frequently called the Law of Descent and Distribution, and to use the term "succession" as synonymous with descent and distribution. Succession, as the term is here used, may be defined as "the coming in of another to take the property of one who dies without disposing of it by will."²

Descent. — Descent, in its technical meaning, is hereditary succession to an estate in realty; it is the succession to the ownership of an estate by inheritance, or by an act of law, as distinguished from purchase.³

Distribution. — The term "distribution" is commonly used to express the division of the personal estate of an intestate, according to the rules prescribed by law.⁴

Distinction Between Descent and Distribution. — Thus it will be seen that the term "descent" is usually applied to the devolution of real estate, and "distribution" to that of personality.⁵

Inheritance. — The term "inheritance" is often used as synonymous with descent to denote the fact of receiving an estate as heir. It therefore refers to the devolution of real property. But, while this is its strict legal significance, in its popular acceptance the word "inheritance" includes the devolution of both real and personal property, and is coextensive in meaning with succession.⁶

II. NATURE AND THEORY OF SUCCESSION. — A person may, subject only to certain restrictions imposed by law for the protection of the wife and surviving minor children,⁷ freely alien any of his property during his lifetime, or dispose of the same by last will. But, upon the death of a person, the law, in the absence of testamentary disposition by him, disposes of his property as it might be presumed that he himself would do if acting rationally and without motives or influences outside of the family relation.⁸ It would seem hardly necessary to say that, whatever may be the rules governing the devolution of property in any country, they must of necessity be more or less arbitrary and artificial, "creatures of the civil polity, and juris positivi merely."¹ What these rules shall be, must, therefore, in the nature of things, depend upon the condition and genius of the people among whom they prevail.²

III. ORIGIN OF LAW OF SUCCESSION — 1. Succession to Personal Property — By Common Law. — The right of succession to the personal property of one who died without making any disposition thereof by will, or otherwise, can hardly be said to have been recognized by the common law. By the common law, the personal property of an intestate went to the bishop, or ordinary,³ who, after paying the debts of the decedent as far as his goods extended, in compliance with an early statute,⁴ himself appropriated the residue, to be devoted to pious uses, or, in other words, to the purchase of masses to be said for the repose of the soul of the deceased. Later statutes compelled administrator to be granted to the next relatives of the deceased.⁵ And when, at the time of the Protestant Reformation, the saying of masses was declared, by Parliament, to be superstitious, and was no longer allowed by the courts, the administrator, after the payment of the debts and funeral expenses of the deceased, took what remained.⁶

By Statute. — The hardships of allowing the administrator to enjoy the surplus property to the exclusion of the intestate's kin of equal degree with the administrator, led to the enactment of the Statute of Distributions,⁷ providing for distribution among the widow and next of kin. This statute may, therefore, be said to have first given the right of distribution. Each of the United States has its own statute of distribution. The American statutes, while differing from one another in detail, are but modifications of the English statute.

2. Succession to Real Property — By Common Law. — The growth of the common law produced a number of rules or canons of inheritance, which have long regulated the transmission of real property from the ancestor to the heir in so clear and decided a manner as to preclude all uncertainty as to the course which the descent is to take.

By Statute. — But these rules having grown up under, and being founded upon, the feudal system of the middle ages, were found incompatible with the institutions of the present age. A departure from the common law was first begun in the United States. At an early period in the history of the colonies, important departures from these canons were made in the progress of legislation.⁸ And when the colonies became states, each had its own system of rules for the government of property within its limits, all departing more or less from the common law, and some varying materially from others. At the present time, the common law has been universally rejected in the United States, and each state has established a law of descent for itself. In England material modifications have been ingrafted upon the ancient canons.⁹

3. Source and Construction of Succession Statutes. — The English statute of distributions, which was to a great extent founded upon the civil law, being

9. The statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 106, amending the law of inheritance, was applicable to borrowed mainly from the 118th Novel of Justinian,¹ has always been construed by the courts according to the rules of the civil law.² And it should be remembered, as aiding in the construction of American statutes, that when the rules for the descent and distribution of an intestate's property which have been adopted in the United States are examined, it will be found that the American law of succession has borrowed much more from the civil than from the common law. This is largely due to the fact that the English statute of distributions has, with various modifications, been extensively adopted in the United States, and, in general, extended to real property.³ Statutes of descent and distribution are subject and to be construed with reference to the law concerning dower, tenancy by the curtesy, partnership, homesteads, and exemption, and particularly to provisions in favor of the widow and minor children for their immediate support.⁴

4. Survival of Common-law Rules — a. IN GENERAL. — But enough of the common-law system has been preserved to render a general statement of its provisions necessary to the clear comprehension of the modern law of succession.

b. COURSE OF SUCCESSION. — For example, while the common law as to descent has been so far supplied or departed from in the United States as to be practically of little force, it has been so far recognized as the foundation of American law that, when the statute does not provide otherwise for a given case of descent, he who would have been heir at common law in England is declared to take, and the common-law rules for ascertaining kinship to prevail.⁵

c. DISTINCTION BETWEEN SUCCESSION TO REAL AND TO PERSONAL PROPERTY. — Another illustration of the fact that the modern law of succession has retained some features of the common law which had their origin in the all descents subsequent to January 1, 1834. It was amended by 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35.

1. Source of the English Statute of Distributions. — See Carter v. Crawley, T. Raym. 496.

2. Construction of the English Statute of Distributions. — In the construction of the English statute of distributions, the courts have always regarded the fact that it was for the purpose of regulating the matter which was the proper subject of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, which proceeded in matters of property according to the rules of the civil law. Rex v. Raines, 1 Ld. Raym. 571, 1 P. Wms. 25; Carter v. Crawley, T. Raym. 496; Maw v. Harding, 2 Vern. 233; Walsh v. Walsh, Prec. Ch. 54; Bowers v. Littlewood, 1 P. Wms. 594; Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 117.

3. Source of American Succession Statutes. — Kelsey v. Hardy, 20 N. H. 479. This was done by the provincial act of 4 Wm. & M., c. 2. Sheffield v. Lovering, 12 Mass. 489. So it has been said that the Maine statutes were substantially derived (through the provincial statutes of 4 Wm. & M., c. 2; 9 Anne, c. 2, and the early statutes of the mother commonwealth) from the English statutes of distributions, 22 and 23 Car. II., c. 10, and 1 Jac. II. Decoster v. Wing, 76 Me. 450. And the New Hampshire statute of descents (Act of Feb. 3, 1789, 1 N. H. Laws 207) was in substance copied from the English statute. Parker v. Nims, 2 N. H. 460; Prescott v. Carr, 29 N. H. 453, 61 Am. Dec. 652.

We are told by Carr, J., in Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. (Va.) 364, that the framers of the Virginia act regulating descents "looked at the common-law canons of descent to avoid, not to imitate; to pull down, not to build up. All its principles are violated, its landmarks removed, its fences broken down, its traces obliterated." And see Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh (Va.) 368; Stones v. Keeling, 5 Call (Va.) 143.

In Texas, it was said that the laws of descent of real property in that state are more in harmony with the civil law of Spain than with the common law of England. McKinney v. Abbott, 49 Tex. 371.

Until the law of California regulated the administration, descent, and distribution of estates, the Mexican law was applicable. McNeil v. First Congregational Soc., 66 Cal. 105.

4. 1 Woern. Am. L. Adm., § 64.

5. Effect of Common-law Rules on Course of Succession. — Barnitz v. Casey, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 456; Matter of Clark, 17 Nev. 124; Fidler v. Higgins, 21 N. J. Eq. 138; Johnson v. Haines, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 64; Cresoe v. Laidley, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 279; Bevan v. Taylor, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 397. So it was held that a naked trust estate descends to the eldest son, according to the law of primogeniture; such estates not being within the provisions of the New Jersey statute of descents. Wills v. Cooper, 25 N. J. L. 137.

In New York, the statute, after laying down the rules of descent, expressly provides that "in all cases not provided for by the preceding rules, the inheritance shall descend according to the course of the common law." 3 New York Rev. Stat. (7th ed.) p. 2213, § 16. And there is a similar provision in Arkansas.

But it has been said that the common law feudal system is found in the distinction preserved between the descent of realty and the distribution of personalty by the rule under which real property goes, when its owner dies intestate, to the heir, while personal property is, under the same circumstances, distributed among the next of kin of the intestate by an administrator appointed for that purpose by the proper court.¹ While legislation has not obliterated this and certain other distinctions, such as the difference which sometimes obtains between the estates given in different kinds of property,² it has shown a steady tendency toward effecting a homogeneity in the devolution of real and personal property. Under the intestate acts, the same persons in general succeed to both realty and personalty, whether as heirs or distributees.³

IV. INHERITANCE AND DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE — 1. Definitions. — An inheritance is an estate which descends or may descend to an heir upon the death of an ancestor.⁴ Each portion of the intestate's effects of which division is made, and which goes to the persons entitled thereto under the statutes of distributions, may be termed a distributive share.⁵

2. Difference Between Succession to Personalty and to Realty. — It may be said generally that realty descends directly to the heir without the intervention of the administrator, except so far as under statutes he is empowered to deal with it in behalf of creditors; while personalty is transmitted to the distributees through the administrator, in whom, pending such transmission, the legal ownership is vested. The distinction has its origin in the incidents of the feudal system, and, although not of so much importance as formerly, still exists.⁶

3. What Property Descends and What Is Distributed. — A general treatment of the questions which frequently arise in consequence of the difference in mode between the devolution of personalty and that of realty, as to whether the property under consideration descends to the heir of the intestate under the statutes of descents, or is to be distributed by the administrator under the statutes of distributions, may be found elsewhere.⁷

V. ANCESTOR OR PROPOSITOR — 1. Definitions — Definition of Ancestor. — The term "ancestor," in its technical meaning, and as used in the statutes of descents, means any one from whom an estate is inherited; its meaning is not confined to the lineal progenitors, as has sometimes been insisted.⁸ It thus appears that the term is often employed in the statutes as the correlative of heir,⁹ but it does not always have that meaning. As sometimes employed it can be resorted to for a rule only where the statute has manifestly left a case unprovided for. Peacock v. Smart, 17 Mo. 402.

1. Survival of Difference Between Successor to Real and Personal Property. — See infra, this section, Difference Between Succession to Personalty and to Realty.

2. To illustrate: In Pennsylvania, the real estate of an intestate without issue goes to the parents for life and then to his brothers and sisters in fee, while his personalty goes to the parents absolutely. And so in most cases where the statutory law of succession gives a life estate in realty, an absolute title is given to personalty.

It has been argued that the distinction should be abolished, and realty and personalty, in their transmission, be treated as one and governed by the same rules. See article in 15 Am. L. Rev. 512, for a summary of the argument. See also Woerner Adm., §§ 16, 337; remarks of Hon. John F. Dillon in 22 Am. L. Rev. 30; and remarks of Hon. David Dudley Field in 22 Am. L. Rev. 57.

is synonymous with kindred, and embraces all from whom a title could be derived by descent.¹

Definition of Propositus. — The person from whom a succession is to be traced is sometimes called the propositus, i. e., the person proposed.²

2. Common-law Rules Determining Ancestor — a. DESCENT TRACED FROM FIRST PURCHASER. — It is a rule of the common law that descent must be traced from the first purchaser. While this rule is necessarily of no practical importance in lineal descent, it lies at the foundation of the law of collateral inheritance. With reference to its practical application the rule may be more specifically stated thus: Upon a failure of issue in the last proprietor, the estate shall descend to the blood of the first purchaser; or, in other words, it shall result back to the heirs of the body of that ancestor from whom it either really has or is supposed by fiction of law to have originally descended.

Definition of First Purchaser. — By first purchaser is meant the person who acquired an estate to his family, or brought it into the family which at present owns it, whether the same was transferred to him by sale, or by gift, or by any other method, except only that of descent.³ Therefore, such person might, with reference to his relation to the land, also be denoted by the term "last purchaser," meaning the last person who acquired the land otherwise than by descent.⁴

b. MODE OF DETERMINING FIRST PURCHASER; SEISINA FACIT STIPITEM. — In connection with the rule that descent must be traced from the first purchaser, a doctrine which is its auxiliary in an evidentiary sense, in that it supplies a simpler mode of proving heirship to the first purchaser than by tracing pedigree in a direct line from such root of descent, demands consideration. The doctrine referred to is that expressed in the maxim seisina facit stipitem. As supplementary of the doctrine of the feudal law, which required that whoever claimed by descent should make himself to be the heir of the first purchaser, it was considered that the seizin of the last possessor from whom he claimed as his heir of the whole blood should be presumptive evidence of his being of the blood of the first purchaser.⁵ This supplies the difficulty of investigating a descent from a distant stock through a line of succession become dim by the lapse of ages.⁶

c. DESCENT TRACED FROM PERSON WHO LAST DIED SEIZED — (1) In General. — The effect of the common-law rule that descent must be traced from the first purchaser, together with its auxiliary doctrine expressed in the maxim seisina facit stipitem, is, then, that the claimant must show kinship to the person who last died seized in deed. Though the law passes an inheritance upon the heir immediately upon the ancestor's death, he thereby only acquires a seizin in law, and this alone would not enable him to transmit the inheritance to his heirs; for, at common law, no one could be a stirps from whom a descent could be derived, unless he had been actually seized. The maxim of the common law was non jus sed seisina facit stipitem. He could not be accounted an ancestor who had only a bare right or title to enter or be otherwise seized; for the law required this notoriety of possession as evidence that the ancestor had that property in himself which was to be transmitted to his heir. It may, then, be stated as the clear result of all the authorities that, wherever a person succeeded to an inheritance by descent, he must have obtained an actual seizin or possession, or seizin in deed, as contradistinguished from seizin in law, in order to make himself the root or stock from which the future inheritance by right of blood must have been derived; that is, in other words, in order to make the estate transmissible to his heirs. If, therefore, the heir on whom the inheritance has been cast by descent, dies before he has acquired the requisite seizin, his ancestor, and not himself, becomes the person last seized of the inheritance and to whom the claimants must make themselves heirs.¹

(2) Descent of Reversions and Remainders. — A notable application of this doctrine is found in the descent of estates in reversion and remainder. If the person owning the remainder or reversion expectant upon the determination of a freehold estate dies during the continuance of the particular estate, the remainder or reversion does not descend to his heir, because he has never had seizin, but will, in general, descend to the person who is heir to him who created the freehold estate.²

3. Statutory Rules Determining Ancestor — a. IN ENGLAND. — In England, it is now provided by statute that descent shall be traced from the last purchaser of the property, and for this purpose the person last entitled to the property shall be deemed to be the purchaser, unless it be proved that he inherited it.³ But where there is a total failure of heirs of the purchaser, or where the land shall be descendible as if an ancestor had been the purchaser, and there should be a total failure of the heirs of such ancestor, then the descent shall henceforth be traced from the person last entitled to the property as if he had been the purchaser.⁴

b. IN UNITED STATES — (1) Abrogation of Common-law Rules. — In the United States the common law of descent is so completely superseded by statute that the source whence the intestate's realty was derived will not be looked to, except in compliance with the demands of some statutory provision.⁵ Hence, under statutes which do not in any case recognize any distinction in the descent or distribution of the property of a deceased person in consequence of the source from which it came, it has been uniformly held that the rule of the common law that the heir must be of the blood of the first purchaser is wholly abrogated.⁶ The ownership of or title to property is

1. Rule Requiring Ancestor to Have Been Seized. — Burt R. P., § 303; 4 Kent Com. 386; Broom Max. 525; Goodtitle v. Newman, 3 Wils. C. Pl. 516; Hawkins v. Shewen, 1 Sim. & St. 260.

Origin of Rule. — 2 Bl. Com. 209.

Exceptions to Rule. — There are some reasonable qualifications in the English law to the universality of the rule. If the ancestor acquired the land by purchase, he might, in some cases, transmit it to his heirs, though he never had actual seizin of it himself. Shelley's Case, 1 Coke 98a; Burt R. P., § 304; 2 Greenl. Cruise 149. So if, upon the exchange of lands, one party had entered and the other died before entry, his heir would still take by descent, for he could not take in any other capacity. Shelley's Case, 1 Coke 98a; 4 Kent Com. 386. But, as to the validity of an exchange without entry, see the title EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY, vol. 11, p. 572, note 2.

It is the rule in equity, that if a person is entitled to real estate by a contract, and dies before it is conveyed, his equitable title descends to his heir. Potter v. Potter, 1 Ves. 437. And see Roup v. Bradner, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 513.

5. Status of First Purchaser — Rule in the United States. — See Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 58; Doe v. Gilbert, 1 How. (Miss.) 32; Peacock v. Smart, 17 Mo. 402; Prescott v. Carr, 29 N. H. 453, 61 Am. Dec. 652; Kelsey v. Hardy, 20 N. H. 479; Bell v. Scammon, 15 N. H. 381, 41 Am. Dec. 706; Parker v. Nims, 2 N. H. 460.

In Texas, it is specially enacted that there is no distinction between property derived by descent, etc., from the father, and that which may have been derived by descent from the mother; and all the estate vests at death of the intestate as if he had been the original purchaser thereof. Sayle's Civil Stat., § 1647. And see Jones v. Barnett, 30 Tex. 638; Chandler v. Copeland, 31 Tex. 151; McKinney v. Abbott, 49 Tex. 371.

substituted for seizin, and the heir takes all the real estate owned by the ancestor at the time of his death.¹

(2) Succession to Reversions and Remainders. — In consequence of the abolition of the common-law rules requiring a claimant to show kinship to the person who last died seized in deed, the heirs of a reversioner or remainderman take as absolutely as if their ancestor were actually seized as of a freehold in possession; the word "seized," when applied to such an interest, being equivalent to owning, and "seizin" to ownership. A remainderman or reversioner, therefore, becomes a proper stock of descent, and the remainder or reversion of one dying intestate will go among his heirs in the same manner as estate in possession.²

(3) Partial Recognition of Common-law Rules. — While the common-law rules for determining the ancestor or propositus have been generally rejected throughout the United States, statutes which give a partial recognition to the first purchaser in tracing the course of succession have been enacted in many of the states. These statutes will be treated in the two next succeeding sections, the first of which treats of succession to ancestral estates, and the second of succession to estates of unmarried infants.

(4) Ancestral and Non-ancestral Estates — (a) Statutory Provisions. — In pursuance of a policy of keeping real property in the line of the ancestor by whom it was brought into the family, statutes have been enacted in many of the United States which, generally speaking, recognize a distinction between estates which were acquired by the intestate's own industry and estates which were derived from some ancestor, and direct that the latter shall go to the intestate's next of kin who are of the blood of the person from whom they were derived. These statutes vary in their phraseology. In some of the statutes the distinction made is between "ancestral" and "non-ancestral" estates. In others, the distinction is between "ancestral estates" and "new acquisitions" or "acquired estates." In yet other statutes ancestral estates are referred to as estates "come by" or "on the part of" the father or mother. Many of the statutes are more explicit, and, instead of speaking of ancestral estates as above, refer to them in express terms as inheritances which come to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift from some one of his ancestors.³

Powell*, 114 Ga. 600; Hicks v. Pegues, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 413; Guion v. Burton, Meigs (Tenn.) 565. And see Guion v. Anderson, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 298.

Under the rule of the North Carolina Revised Code, c. 38, that "every inheritance shall lineally descend forever to the issue of the person who died last seized, entitled or having any interest therein," it was held that neither actual nor legal seizin was necessary to make the stock in the devolution of estates. Sears v. McBride, 70 N. Car. 152.

But as to the law in Maryland, see Chirac v. Reinecker, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 625. It was held in this case that by the law of descent a person claiming as heir must prove himself heir of the person last seized of the estate; and if an intestate leaves a brother of the whole blood, who dies without issue, and without being actually seized of the estate, the estate will descend to the half blood of the person so seized.

2. Reversions and Remainders—Succession to, by Statute. — Oliver v. Powell, 114 Ga. 600; Moore v. Rake, 26 N. J. L. 574. For the

But see Lawrence v. Pitt, 1 Jones (46 N. Car.) 344, in which case it was held that where, by the death of her grandfather (the person last seized), a child was entitled to a reversion in land, expectant on the termination of a life estate, and such child died before the expiration of the life estate, the inheritance did not vest for life in the parent of the deceased child, under the sixth canon of descent, on the expiration of the life estate. The person entitled to take must make himself heir to the person last seized. As to the common-law rule, see supra, this subdivision, Succession to Reversions and Remainders.

3. Statutes Relating to Ancestral Estates. — See 1 Stim. Am. Stat. L., §§ 3107, 3134. In many states, this distinction is effected by provisions abolishing the distinction between the whole and the half blood, except when the estate of the intestate came to him by devise, descent, or gift of an ancestor. See 1 Stim. Am. Stat. L., § 3133 (E). Under these statutes the intestate's kindred of the whole blood, if next of kin, share in all of the estate of the decedent, no matter from what source it came. Matter of Pearsons, 110 Cal. 524.

(b) What Constitute Ancestral Estates — Definition. — Ancestral estates, as the term is employed in these statutes, may be defined to be estates which come to the intestate in the regular course of descent, and estates which may have been devised to him, or which may have been conveyed to him by deed of gift, but which, or at least part of which, he might have inherited¹ had there been no such devise or deed of gift.

Estates "Come by" or "on the Part of" the Father or Mother. — The expressions "come by" the father or mother and "on the part of" the father or mother have the same meaning.² They have been defined to include every case where the inheritance shall have come to the intestate by gift, devise, or descent from the parent referred to, or from any relative of the blood of such parent.³

(c) What Constitute Non-ancestral Estates — Definition. — On the other hand non-ancestral estates may be defined to be estates which the intestate acquired by his own industry, or by the devise or deed of gift of a person from whom he could not have inherited, either lineally or collaterally.

Distinguished from "Purchased" Estates. — The expression "purchased estates" does not correctly describe the estates of this class, because many estates which, by the common law, would have been held to come by purchase are, within the purview of these statutes, ancestral estates. By the common law, all who took in any way except by descent were regarded as purchasers.⁴ Even the devisee of his father, or other ancestor, was regarded as the purchaser, within the meaning of the rule which required descent to be traced from the person who acquired or first brought the estate into the family — the first purchaser.⁵ But, within the meaning of these statutes, one who takes gratuitously by devise from his ancestor will not thereby become the person to whose blood regard must, in compliance with the provisions of these statutes, be had in tracing the descent of the property.⁶ To become such fountain of inheritable blood, the devisee must be a purchaser for value in the popular sense of the term, or at least derive the estate by gift from some one other than an ancestor.

1. "Ancestor" as Used in Statutes Distinguishing Between Ancestral and Non-ancestral Estates. — It seems that by the term "ancestor," as used in these statutes, is not meant one from whom the intestate would necessarily have inherited, but one from whom he would have inherited, under circumstances which, though not existent, might have taken place. A. B., though he had a sister, H. D., living, devised land to his nephew, R. D., who was a son of such sister. It was held that the deviser was the ancestor of his nephew, R. D., the intestate, within the meaning of the term "ancestor" as used in the provision of the statute regulating the descent of ancestral estates. Greenlee v. Davis, 19 Ind. 62.

And it has been held that a husband who conveys land to his wife by a deed of gift is the wife's "ancestor" within the meaning of the statute. Cornett v. Hough, 136 Ind. 387.

But it has been held differently in North Carolina. Where land was devised by a father to a second son, who as the law stood was not the heir, and the son afterwards died intestate and without issue, it was held that the land descended as a new acquisition. Burgwyn v. Devereux, 1 Ired. L. (23 N. Car.) 583. A case where a grandfather devised land to his grandson, who died in the lifetime of his father, the devisee not being an heir or one of the heirs of the deviser, is to the same effect. Osborne v. Widenhouse, 3 Jones Eq. (56 N. Car.) 238.

And see infra, this subdivision, Instances of Ancestral and Non-ancestral Estates.

2. Estates "Come by" or "on the Part of" Parents Defined. — Kelly v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555, citing Maffit v. Clark, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 260.

3. The expression "on the part of the mother" or "father," employed in the statute of Arkansas, was so defined by the same statute. Dig. Stat., § 2543. See Kelly v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555; Galloway v. Robinson, 19 Ark. 396. It is defined likewise in New York. 3 N. Y. Rev. Stat. (7th ed.) p. 2214, § 29; Heyd. Gen. L. & Rev. Stat. N. Y., p. 3864. See Oliver v. Vance, 34 Ark. 564; Garner v. Wood, 71 Md. 37; Banta v. Demarest, 24 N. J. L. 431; Torrey v. Shaw, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 356; Shippen v. Izard, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 223.

But it was held in Maryland, that the words in the Act of 1786, chapter 45, "and not derived from or through either of his ancestors" meant "and not by descent." Hall v. Jacobs, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 245, approved in Roe v. Doe, 21 Md. 487.

4. Acquisition and Purchase Distinguished. — See Lewis v. Gorman, 5 Pa. St. 164; Latrobe v. Carter, 83 Md. 279.

5. Matter of Donahue, 36 Cal. 329; Ramsey v. Ramsey, 7 Ind. 607; Hall v. Jacobs, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 245.

"New Acquisitions" and "Acquired Estates."—By new acquisition is meant an estate which the intestate acquired by his own exertion or industry, or by will or deed from a stranger to his blood. In other words, it is an estate obtained by any means other than by descent, gift, or gratuitous devise from an ancestor.¹

(a) Instances of Ancestral and Non-ancestral Estates — Lands Acquired by Devise.—If the intestate became entitled to the estate by devise or gift from some person from whom he could not, in the absence of such gift or devise, have inherited it, this is a new acquisition.² And if he acquired the estate by his own exertion or industry, it is immaterial that the title was conveyed to him by means of a devise from his ancestor.³ It may be that if the testator plainly indicates his intention to treat his devisee as a purchaser, and to increase the burden, because he has increased the quantity devised above that which the devisee would have taken by descent, this will be a new acquisition.⁴ But in the absence of evidence of any intention to treat the devisee as a vendee, the charge of a legacy on a devise greater than the devisee would take in the absence of a will, does not, of itself, make the devisee a purchaser.⁵

Estates Come to Intestate by Deed of Gift.—If the intestate's title to land was based upon a deed of gift the land must, of course, be deemed to be ancestral.⁶ But it has sometimes been difficult, in cases of this kind, to determine whether a particular instrument is a deed of gift or a deed of purchase.⁷

1. Definition of "New Acquisitions" and Ancestral Estates.—See West v. Williams, 15 Ark. 682; Brewster v. Benedict, 14 Ohio 368; Frick Coke Co. v. Laughhead, 203 Pa. St. 172.

2. Intestate's Title Acquired by Devise from a Stranger to His Blood.—Barnes v. Loyd, 37 Ind. 523; Walker v. Dunshee, 38 Pa. St. 430.

Where a person devised land to his sister-in-law, it was held that the devisee did not take an ancestral estate. Penn v. Cox, 16 Ohio 30.

Where a husband devised land to his wife, she being a stranger to his blood, both paternal and maternal, this was held to constitute a new acquisition. West v. Williams, 15 Ark. 682. So where a husband made a devise to his wife of an estate of inheritance, which would not have descended to her had he died intestate, it was held that she did not take an ancestral estate, as it was not one which "came to her from any ancestor." Birney v. Wilson, 11 Ohio St. 426. To the same general effect is Culbertson v. Duly, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 195; Opdyke's Appeal, 49 Pa. St. 373.

But see supra, this subdivision, What Constitute Ancestral Estates.

3. Devise to Intestate of Land Acquired by His Own Industry.—See Walker v. Dunshee, 38 Pa. St. 430.

In Kelly v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555, the court, by Hempstead, J., said: "If the son should purchase land from the father or mother for a valuable consideration, it would be a new acquisition, and descend as such."

So in Hartman's Case, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 39, where an intestate had taken certain land at an appraised value, under the will of his father, paying to his brothers and sisters their share of the valuation, he was deemed as to such land a purchaser for value, and therefore the founder of a new stock.

4. Devise Charged with Legacy.—See Kinney v. Glasgow, 53 Pa. St. 141.

5. Kinney v. Glasgow, 53 Pa. St. 141.

Where lands and personal estate were both devised charged with legacies, it was held that the legacy did not so change the nature of the real estate as to make it, in the hands of the intestate, a new acquisition within the meaning of the statute of descents. West v. Williams, 15 Ark. 682.

6. Gift — Land Come to Intestate by Deed of.—Galloway v. Robinson, 19 Ark. 396.

7. Illustrations.—A consideration of "love and affection" and "one dollar" has been held to be formal merely and not to affect the character of the conveyance as a gift. Morris v. Ward, 36 N. Y. 587. But compare Brown v. Whaley, 58 Ohio St. 654, 65 Am. St. Rep. 793.

In Patterson v. Lamson, 45 Ohio St. 77, it appeared that a father, desiring to make a daughter a wedding gift, bargained for a tract of land, paid the agreed price in money, and caused the vendor to convey it to the daughter just prior to her marriage. The deed recited payment by the grantee, the daughter. It was held that it was not a deed of gift, parol evidence not being admissible to show the facts in contradiction of the recital.

Trust Estate Held to Be Ancestral.—The intestate's grandfather executed a declaration of trust by which he declared that he held his real and personal property, with the exception of two pieces of property therein specified, in trust for his children and grandchildren. His three children took three-fifths of the estate, two grandchildren took a fifth, and the intestate, another grandchild, took the remaining fifth: but the shares of the grandchildren were subject to the deduction of a sum which was to be added to the children's share. The sum which the instrument required to be paid to the children was ascertained after the death of the grandfather and paid. It was held that the land which the intestate took under the deed of trust came to him by gift and that it descended as an ancestral estate. Whipple v. Latrobe, 20 R. I. 508.

Effect of Alienating Inheritance. — There can, of course, be no doubt that an inheritance may be converted into funds, and the proceeds invested in other property without giving to the property so acquired an ancestral character.¹ Where an intestate has mortgaged an ancestral estate and purchased a parcel of land with the proceeds, the land so purchased is to be regarded as having come to the intestate by purchase.² And the same result may be accomplished by an exchange of estates.³ It even seems that the owner of an ancestral estate may destroy the ancestral character of the estate by conveying it away and then taking a reconveyance.⁴

Effect of Exchange of Lands by Heirs. — It has been held in Ohio that if heirs exchange lands the estate ceases to be ancestral.⁵

Effect of Partition by Heirs. — And it has been held in the same state that after a division by tenants in common of an estate acquired by descent, each giving the other a quitclaim deed, the property is no longer ancestral.⁶ But it has, on the other hand, been held that a voluntary partition of an inheritance by the heirs does not change the character of the estate.⁷

Surrender of Mortgage by Devisee for Deed to Land. — It has been held that a devisee of a mortgage upon a parcel of land, who exchanges the mortgage for a deed to the land, takes the land by purchase within the meaning of the statutes.⁸

Foreclosure of Mortgage by Devisee. — And it has been held that a devisee of a mortgage on a parcel of land who forecloses the mortgage and purchases the land at the sheriff's sale takes the land by purchase within the meaning of the statute.⁹

Payment of Balance of Purchase Money by Heirs After Succession. — Where the purchaser of land at an orphan's-court sale paid part of the purchase money and entered into possession of the land and resided thereon until his death, it was held that he, rather than his heirs, was to be regarded as the purchaser of the land, although the balance of the purchase money was not paid until after his death by his administrators, who took a deed to themselves "for the use of the heirs."¹⁰

Estate Allotted to Widow Out of Husband's Insolvent Estate. — The preference given to the blood of the ancestor from whom an inheritance was come to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift, has no application, it has been held, to an estate allotted to a widow out of the insolvent estate of her husband, for such an estate is acquired by the widow, not by inheritance from an ancestor, but by statutory right, the statute carving it out of the estate of the husband and devolving the title on her.¹¹

Estate Coming to Intestate by Lapse of Devise. — A statute providing, among other things, that when the estate comes to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors, all who are not of the blood of the ancestor shall be excluded, it was held that land which came to the intestate by forfeiture incurred by his mother by a second marriage, she having inherited it from

Where A received land in Decatur county from his maternal grandfather, and A's father took up land in Tipton county in A's name, in consideration whereof A conveyed his Decatur lands to his father, it was held that Tipton lands would not be considered as maternal ancestral. Armington v. Armington, 28 Ind. 74.

the intestate's brother, who inherited it from his father, was not within the provision.¹

(e) Character of Estate Determined by Legal Title. — Where the legal and the equitable estate in the land come through different channels and in different modes, it has been held that it is the course of the legal rather than the equitable estate which determines whether it be an ancestral estate in the holder.²

(f) Person from Whom Succession Traced — aa. GENERAL RULE. — The rule prescribed by these statutes for regulating the succession to an ancestral estate may be said, speaking generally, to be that it shall descend only to those collaterals or ascendants who are of the blood of the person from whom the estate came.³

bb. RULE NOT APPLICABLE TO NON-ANCESTRAL ESTATES. — The rule prescribed by these statutes does not, of course, affect the devolution of non-ancestral estates, new acquisitions, or acquired estates; if an estate belongs to this class, there is no opportunity for the operation of the rule requiring ancestral blood,⁴ and the succession will be traced with regard to the blood of the intestate only.⁵

cc. RULE NOT APPLICABLE TO SUCCESSION IN DESCENDING LINE. — As the common-law rule requiring descent to be traced from the first purchaser did not affect the lineal descent of an estate, so, under these statutes, the distinction which is founded upon the mode in which, and the source whence, the intestate became entitled, does not affect the order of succession in the descending line; it is only applied to succession in the collateral and ascending lines.⁶

dd. RULE MERELY PREFERS INTESTATE'S KINDRED WHO ARE OF ANCESTOR'S BLOOD. — The recognition given, by the statutes under consideration, to the blood of the ancestor from whom an ancestral estate has come, is not a preference of the blood of the ancestor, to the exclusion of the blood of the intestate.⁷ The inheritance is cast upon the next of kin to the intestate.⁸ But these statutes give a preference to those of the kindred of the intestate who are of the blood of the ancestor. While the person last seized, or last having ownership or title to the property, remains the propositus whose nearest kindred must be traced, such kindred must, however, be of the blood of the person from whom the estate came.⁹

ee. EXTENT OF PREFERENCE. — There is considerable conflict of opinion as to the extent to which the kindred of the intestate who are of the blood of the ancestor shall be preferred to the kindred who are not of such blood.

Succession to Estate Coming to Intestate by Gift. — But in Indiana it was provided by section 2473 of Rev. Stat. 1881 (sec. 2628, Rev. Stat. 1894), that an estate which shall have come to the intestate, who dies without issue, by gift, shall revert to the donor, saving to the widower or widow his or her rights therein. See Dolin v. Leonard, 144 Ind. 410.

Preference of All Kindred of Testator's Blood. — Under some of the statutes, the courts go so far as to hold that the intestate's whole line of kindred, who are not on the side of the ancestor, will be postponed to the remotest kinsmen in that line which is of the blood of the person from whom the ancestral estate came — that is to say, the line of succession must be traced in that ancestral line, leaving off the side which has none of the blood of such person.¹ But the preference which is thus given to those next of kin to the intestate who are of the blood of the ancestor does not operate to the exclusion of the next of kin of the intestate who are not of the blood of such ancestor, if there are no kindred of such blood. It is usually provided, in terms or by implication, that if there are no kin of such blood, then the kindred of the intestate without common blood with such ancestor shall take the estate rather than that it shall escheat.²

Preference of Blood of Ancestor Within Certain Degrees. — The distance which may be gone into the ancestral line from which the estate came, in search of an heir, is limited in some states, and if an heir is not found within a certain degree, the estate will go to other kindred of the intestate, who are nearer related, though not of the blood of the ancestor.³

Preference of Blood of Ancestor Among Kindred of Equal Degree. — According to the doctrine established by other courts, if there are several kinsmen of the intestate in the same degree, some of whom are of the blood of the ancestor while the others are not, then only those will take who are of such blood. But this is as far as the statutes go; they are not in any case to be so construed as to divert the descent of an ancestral estate from the nearest of kin; a remote relative of the blood of the ancestor does not exclude a nearer relative not of such blood.⁴

Agreement Between the Different Rules. — It is clear that, under each of these rules, those kindred of the intestate who are of the blood of the ancestor will exclude his kindred in the same degree who are not of such blood.⁵

1. Preference of All Kindred of Ancestor's Blood. — Coolidge v. Burke, 69 Ark. 237; Beard v. Mosely, 30 Ark. 517; Campbell v. Ware, 27 Ark. 65; Scull v. Vaugine, 15 Ark. 695; *Kelly v. Though some early North Carolina cases, under statutes not now in force, gave a preference to the half blood not of the blood of the ancestor to more remote kindred of such blood, in later cases the remote collaterals of the blood of the ancestor were preferred. Caldwell v. Black, 5 Ired. L. (27 N. Car.) 463; Bell v. Dozier, 1 Dev. L. (12 N. Car.) 333; Felton v. Billups, 2 Dev. & B. L. (19 N. Car.) 308; Dozier v. Grandy, 66 N. Car. 484.

In Pennsylvania, where a father died seized leaving two children, one of whom afterwards died leaving the other his heir, who also died, it was held that a paternal uncle would take before the mother of the person last seized, for while she was of the blood of her child she was not of the blood of her husband. Maffit v. Clark, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 258. And see Hart's Appeal, 8 Pa. St. 32; Roberts's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 417; McWilliams v. Ross, 46 Pa. St. 369.

An estate which was inherited by the intestate from his father passes to his aunt who is of the whole blood of the father to the exclusion of his half brother who is not of the blood of the father. Henszey v. Gross, 185 Pa. St. 353.

It has been held that the half brothers and sisters of the intestate, who are not of the blood of his mother, from whom he inherited an estate, are excluded in favor of his wife. Matter of Amy, 12 Utah 333.

In Alabama this rule is established by the terms of the statute, which in directing the descent of ancestral estates, excludes from the inheritance all kindred who are not of the ancestor's blood "as against those of the same degree." ff. WHETHER REGARD IS HAD TO BLOOD OF IMMEDIATE OR OF REMOTE ANCESTOR. — In the construction of these statutes, the question has arisen how far back in the chain of title by descent, or by gift or gratuitous devise from an ancestor, it is necessary to go in fixing upon the person to whose blood regard is to be had in tracing the course of succession. It has been held that the heir must be of the blood of the ancestor who last acquired the estate by purchase other than by gift or gratuitous devise from an ancestor, no matter how many intervening transfers of the title by descent or by gift or gratuitous devise from an ancestor there may have been.¹ On the other hand, by the construction placed upon these statutes in other states it is only necessary to look to the intestate's immediate ancestor, and no inquiry will be made as to the mode in which such ancestor obtained his title; the person referred to in these provisions as the new fountain of inheritable blood is the ancestor from whom the property came to the intestate by immediate descent, gift, or devise.²

(5) Estates of Unmarried Infants — (a) Statutory Provisions. — By the statutes of a number of the United States regard is to be had to the source whence the deceased derived his estate if he was an infant and unmarried, or, according to some of the statutes, without issue. These statutes are by no means uniform. In some of the states it is provided that on the death of an infant without issue an estate which came to him from either parent shall go to the other children of the same parent or to their issue, while in other states it is provided

See Matter of Amy, 12 Utah 334.

Real estate was devised by A to his daughter B. On her death it descended to her son C. C died intestate without issue and without brothers and sisters or their representatives. It was said that the "ancestor" intended by the statute with regard to the distribution of an ancestral estate, is the one from whom the estate immediately and not the one from whom it remotely descended, and held that the estate descended to C's next of kin, though not of the blood of A, from whom the estate originally came. Clark v. Shailer, 46 Conn. 119. So, it was held that property which was inherited by a son from his father and descended to the son's daughter, passed, on her death without issue, to her father's half brothers and sisters, though not of the blood of the grandfather. White v. White, 19 Ohio St. 531.

In construing the Rhode Island statute of 1822, which was worded the same as the Public Statutes of 1882, c. 187, § 6, the court in Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 58, by Story, J., said: "As to descents, as well as gifts and devises from a parent, it is plain that the act looks only to the immediate descent or title. A descent from a parent to a child cannot be construed to mean a descent through and not from a parent. So a gift or devise from a parent must be construed to mean a gift or devise by the act of that parent, and not by that of some other ancestor more remote, passing through the parent."

(b) When Statutes Applicable. — Under these statutes, the source from which the estate was derived will be looked to only in the cases which they specify.² Thus, the statutes can have no application if the intestate was not under twenty-one years of age.³ And they can have no application if the intestate did not take in the specified manner.⁴ Furthermore, the statutes are only applicable to estates derived from the specified source; statutes which refer only to estates derived by the infant from one of his parents do not affect successions to estates derived from a brother or sister,⁵ or a grandparent.⁶ And if the infant took an estate by inheritance, through a parent, by right of representation, from a more remote ancestor, he cannot be regarded as having taken it by inheritance from the former.⁷ These statutes look only to the immediate descent; it is immaterial how the parent from whom the decedent derived title acquired the estate.⁸

(c) Person from Whom Succession Traced. — As to the nature of the succession under these provisions, it has been held that the estate to which an infant, who died unmarried and without issue, derived title by gift, devise, or descent (in some statutes it is only by descent) from one of his parents, will devolve as if such infant had died in the lifetime of the parent, and the estate is to be considered as coming from the parent.⁹

California. — De Castro v. Barry, 18 Cal. 96.
Kentucky. — Driskell v. Hanks, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 855; Renfro v. Taylor, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 402.

2. Cases to Which Statutes Applicable. — See Stitt v. Bush, 22 Oregon 239.

An early New Hampshire statute which directed that, under the specified circumstances, the estate should go among the surviving brothers and sisters, was held to have no application where the deceased infant did not leave any brothers or sisters. It was held that, in their absence, the statute did not make any distinction in the descent founded upon the source from which the property was derived. Kelsey v. Hardy, 20 N. H. 479. And see Benson v. Swan, 60 Me. 161; Decoster v. Wing, 76 Me. 450; Albee v. Vose, 76 Me. 448; Kirkendall's Estate, 43 Wis. 167.

4. A Provision as to Lands Descending from a Father does not apply to lands devised by the father. Nash v. Cutler, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 491. And see M'Affee v. Gilmore, 4 N. H. 391; Bell v. Scammon, 15 N. H. 383, 41 Am. Dec. 706.

5. Estates Derived from Brother. — Driskell v. Hanks, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 863.

But a different construction was given to a statute which provided that "when any of the children of the intestate die before his arrival at the age of twenty-one years, and unmarried, such deceased child's share shall descend equally among the surviving brothers and sisters, and such as legally represent them." J. P. died intestate, leaving surviving him his widow and their two minor sons, D. and P. J. D. died, and his share of the estate went to P. J. The widow afterwards married, and had issue thereby two daughters. On the death of P. J. the question arose as to whether that part of his estate which had been his brother D.'s should descend to his half-sisters, who were of the blood of D., or should go to those of his kin who were of the blood of J. P., which would exclude the half-sisters from the inheritance. It was held that the latter was the true rule, it being considered that the estate did not descend from his brother D., but from his father. Perkins v. Simonds, 28 Wis. 90. This case is affirmed in Wiesner v. Zaun, 39 Wis. 188, although it is questioned, in an opinion by Cole, J., whether the rule there established is supportable on principle.

Lovering*, 12 Mass. 489; Roney v. Edmonds, 15 Mass. 291; Nash v. Cutler, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 491; Goodrich v. Adams, 138 Mass. 552.

(d) Nature of Intestate's Title. — But, though this is the general purpose of these statutes, it does not thereby follow that the title of such infant is defeasible upon his death. It seems that it is his absolute property while he lives; and that it can be taken for such debts as he was bound to pay, or be used for his support.¹

(e) Succession to Estate of Illegitimate Child. — A statute providing, in effect, that if an infant dies without issue, having title to real estate derived by gift, devise, or descent from one of his parents, the property shall descend to the parent, has been held to apply alone to a person born in lawful wedlock.²

(6) Distribution of Personalty. — In the construction of statutes which prescribe the course of descent of realty and distribution of personalty in the same provisions, it is considered that though the statute contains a provision which gives to the common-law rule that descent must be traced from the first purchaser a partial recognition, such provision has no application to the distribution of personal property which is distributed without reference to the source from whence it came to the intestate.³ And, according to the express provisions of some of the statutes, the distribution of personal property is the same as that of non-ancestral real estate.⁴ Where the proceeds of realty are devised, i. e., when land is directed to be sold and converted into money and the proceeds turned over by the executor to the devisee, it has been held that this is a devise of money.⁵ If, therefore, a devisee elects to take the fund as land, as he may well do if of age,⁶ this is a new acquisition of title.⁷ So, where a person purchases land with money bequeathed to him by, or inherited from, his ancestor, it is an original purchase.⁸

VI. HEIRS AND DISTRIBUTEES — 1. Definitions — Heir. — An heir is one upon whom the law casts an estate of inheritance immediately upon the death of the owner.⁹ At common law, the heir succeeds to and acquires by operation

1. Intestate's Title. — See Goodrich v. Adams, 138 Mass. 552.

It seems that if the estate of such deceased minor should, under a statute, have been sold for his maintenance or education, the purchaser would acquire a perfect title, which would not be divested on the minor's death. Wiesner v. Zaun, 39 Wis. 188.

One Who Takes a Life Estate by common law or by statute on the owner's death, such as dower, curtesy, or homestead, is not an heir. Proctor v. Clark, 154 Mass. 45. See Gauch v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co., 88 Ill. 251, 30 Am. Rep. 554; Dodge's Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 216, 51 Am. Rep. 519.

Heir Distinguished from Purchaser and Devisee. — A purchaser from a tenant in fee simple in his lifetime, and a devisee under his will, are alike assigns in law, claiming in opposition to and in exclusion of the heir who would otherwise have become entitled. Wms. R. P. 64, citing Hogan v. Jackson, 1 Cowp. 306; Co. Litt.

of law the estate of his ancestor in lands and tenements only; the term, therefore, is not applicable to one to whom the personal estate of the decedent goes.¹ The heir is called into existence by his ancestor's decease, for no man during his lifetime can have an heir; nemo est hæres viventis.²

Heir Apparent and Heir Presumptive. — Before the ancestor's death the person who is next in the line of succession is called an heir apparent or heir presumptive. An heir apparent is the person who, if he survives his ancestor, must certainly be his heir. The heir presumptive is the person who, though not certain to be heir at all events, should he survive, would yet be the heir in case of the ancestor's immediate decease.³

Distributees. — The persons who are entitled under the statutes of distribution to the personal estate of one who is dead intestate, may be denoted by the term "distributees."⁴

Next of Kin. — The phrase "next of kin" is sometimes also employed to denote such relations of a person who has died intestate as take his estate under the statute of distributions.⁵

2. Who May Be Heirs and Distributees — a. GENERAL RULE. — In the absence of certain disabilities which will be discussed presently, the intestate's real estate will devolve upon the persons pointed out by the statutes; all persons, even minors and lunatics, may transmit their estates as intestates, and succeed to the property of others.⁶

b. EXCEPTIONS TO RULE — (1) Monsters. — By the common law, monsters, not having the shape of mankind, but in any part bearing the resemblance of the brute creation, are said to be incapable of inheriting; but, although deformed, if they have human shape, they may be heirs.⁷

(2) Murderer of Intestate. — It has recently been provided by statute in some of the United States that a person who murders another cannot succeed to the latter's property.⁸ The rule which obtains in the absence of any statute to this effect has been discussed in another title.⁹

(3) Aliens. — By the common law aliens are incapable of taking by descent, or inheriting.¹⁰

(4) Bastards. — By the common law, bastards are incapable of being heirs, but this rule has been extensively modified by statute.¹¹

Conveyances on Gambling Consideration. — By a peculiar statutory act of the Ohio territorial government it was provided that all conveyances, etc., made for a gambling consideration, should inure to the use of the heir of the bargainer, and vest the estate in such heir the same as if the bargainer had died intestate. See Bond v. Swearingen, 1 Ohio 395.

Civil Death. — At common law the estate of a person civilly dead would, in certain cases, vest in his heirs as if he were actually dead. See the title CIVIL DEATH, vol. 6, p. 64. But there seems to be no doubt that, in the United States, even in those states where there is a statutory provision that one imprisoned for life shall be deemed civilly dead, the property of such felon does not thereby devolve upon his successors or heirs because of the disability of imprisonment. Smith v. Becker, 62 Kan. 541; Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, 6 Am. St. Rep. 369, and note.

And in Texas, where there was no such provision, it was expressly decided that the estate of one sentenced to imprisonment for life did not descend to his heirs as in the case of death. Davis v. Laning, (Tex. 1892) 19 S. W. Rep. 846. See the title CIVIL DEATH, vol. 6, p. 66, notes 3 and 4.

c. RELATIVES SPECIALLY DESIGNATED. — In directing the course of succession, the statutes of descents and distributions adopted in the states of the Union commonly refer to the nearer relatives by their designation of relationship. The statutes are in this respect explicit.¹

d. KINDRED — (1) In General. — The statutes, after providing specifically for the succession to decedents' estates in case of the survival of the near relatives just referred to, very largely indicate the further order of succession by a general reference to the kindred of the intestate.²

(2) Who Are Kindred. — It is considered that, in speaking of kin or kindred, the statute thereby, unless its language clearly shows that relations by affinity are included,³ means relationship by consanguinity only.⁴ Thus, kin may be defined as a relation or relationship by blood or consanguinity.⁵ As intestate succession, then, depends not a little on the nature of kindred and the several degrees of consanguinity, it will be necessary to state the true notion of this kindred or alliance in blood.

(3) Consanguinity. — Consanguinity is the connection or relation existing among all the different persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor,⁶ as distinguished from affinity, which is a relationship established by marriage.⁷ Consanguinity is either lineal or collateral.

Lineal Consanguinity is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between the intestate and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downward in the direct descending line, or, between the intestate and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upward in the ascending line.⁸

Collateral Consanguinity is that which exists between persons who are descended from the same common ancestor, but not from each other; as between two brothers descended from the same father, or between two cousins descended from the same grandfather.⁹

(4) Classes of Kindred — Descendants, Ascendants, and Collaterals. — Kindred are naturally classified into, first, one's children and their descendants; second, his father, mother, and other ascendants; third, his collateral relations, which include, in the first place, his brothers and sisters and their descendants, and secondly, his uncles, cousins, and other relations of either sex who have not descended from a brother or sister of the deceased. All kindred, then,

A husband is not the next of kin of his wife, within the meaning of the statute of distributions. The words "next of kin" embrace blood relatives only. Peterson v. Webb, 4 Ired. Eq. (39 N. Car.) 56. And see Townsend v. Radcliffe, 44 Ill. 446. So, the surviving husband or wife cannot ordinarily inherit as the next of kin nor as the descendant of the decedent. Prather v. Prather, 58 Ind. 141. See Garrick v. Camden, 14 Ves. Jr. 372; Haraden v. Larrabee, 113 Mass. 431.

And it was held that first cousins inherited in preference to second cousins by consanguinity, though such second cousins were also uncles and aunts by affinity. Speer v. Miller, 37 N. J. Eq. 492.

It has been held that a woman who married one of two brothers, and survived them both, she being of no blood kin to either, and her husband dying first, is in no event an heir at law of the other. Green v. Grant, 108 Ga. 751.

are descendants, ascendants, or collaterals. Ascendants and descendants are lineal kindred; other kindred are collateral.¹

(5) Degrees of Kinship. — In speaking of degrees of relationship, the word "degree" is a metaphorical expression borrowed from the steps of a ladder or of stairs; the kindred descending from their common ancestor from generation to generation are as so many steps in a stair or so many rounds in a ladder. The degree of kindred is established by the number of generations.²

(6) Mode of Reckoning Degrees of Kinship — (a) In Direct Line. — In the direct line — line being understood to be the series of persons who have descended from a common ancestor, placed one under the other in the order of their birth — any one of the persons there represented may be taken as a propositus, in order to class the other persons in the line above and below. This line is then severed into two — namely, the ascending line and the descending line.³ In computing the degrees of kinship of descendants or ascendants to the propositus, every generation, either upward or downward, constitutes a different degree.⁴ This is the only natural way of reckoning the degrees in the direct line, and is common to the civil, canon, and common law.⁵

(b) In Collateral Line — aa. IN GENERAL. — The collateral line, considered of itself and relatively to the common ancestor, is a direct line; it takes the name of collateral when it is placed alongside of another line below the common ancestor, in whom both lines unite. These two lines are independent of each other; they have no connection, except by uniting in the person of the common ancestor, and it is this union which forms the kindred between the persons in these two lines.⁶ There are two modes of computing the degrees of collateral kindred; the one is that of the canon law, and the other is that of the civil law. The computation of degrees of kinship, by the common law and under the succession statutes, is made according to one or the other of these methods.

bb. BY CANON LAW. — The mode of computation by the canon law is to begin with the common ancestor and reckon downward, and the degree in which the two persons, or the more remote of them, is distant from the ancestor, is the degree of kindred subsisting between them; in whatever degree the claimant is distant from the ancestor common to him and the intestate, that is the degree in which they are related; but if there are more degrees between the ancestor and the intestate than between the ancestor and the claimant, then the degrees are reckoned between the ancestor and the intestate.⁷

cc. BY CIVIL LAW. — The civil-law rule is to begin with the intestate, and ascend from him to a common ancestor, and descend from that ancestor to the heir, reckoning a degree each generation, as well in the ascending as in the descending line.⁸

dd. BY COMMON LAW. — It has been stated by an eminent writer that the canon-law method of computing the degrees of consanguinity has been adopted

According to this rule of computation, the father of the intestate stands in the first degree, his brother in the second, and his brother's children in the third. Or, the grandfather stands in the second degree, the uncle in the third, the cousins in the fourth, and so on in a series of genealogical order. See Stim. Am. Stat. L., § 3139, citing statutes of California, Dakota, Louisiana, Montana, New Mexico, and Utah.

by the common law.¹ But it is doubtful if there is any authority for the statement.² By the common law it is immaterial which method of computation is adopted; for, under the efficacy of the principle of indefinite representation, both rules lead to the same result—both will establish the same person to be the heir.³ Hence it has been declared that “it can hardly be said that a dogma, which has no practical efficiency, exists as a part of any system of laws.”⁴ It may be added that it would be more reasonable to adopt the rule of the civil law, rather than that of the canon law, as the common-law rule.⁵

22. UNDER SUCCESSION STATUTES. — In England it has been declared that the English statute of distributions must be construed according to the so-called rule of the common law.⁶ But the rule which has finally prevailed for reckoning the degrees of kindred under that statute is that of civil law.⁷

In the United States. — As has been stated, it is immaterial whether the common law has adopted the rule of the canon law or that of the civil law; by the operation of the common-law doctrine of indefinite representation, the employment of either rule leads to the same result. But under the American succession statutes, which give to the right of representation only a limited effect, very different results are often arrived at by the employment of the one or the other of these several rules. And since these systems of intestate succession were largely derived from the civil law, which ignored the right of representation, the natural result is that, while the canon-law rule has sometimes been recognized,⁸ the rule generally adopted, either by express statutory enactment or judicial construction, is that of the civil law.⁹ To avoid the division of an inheritance into unduly small fractions, and to simplify the rules of descent, statutes frequently provide that, where two or more of the same degree of consanguinity claim as next of kin, those who trace their blood through the nearest lineal ancestor shall be preferred to those whose ancestor is more remote from the intestate.¹⁰ It will be noticed that, where representation is allowed, the same general result is reached by that means.¹¹

8. Mode of Reckoning Kinship under the American Succession Statutes. — In Georgia, the statute, after fixing the order in which certain relatives of the intestate are entitled to the inheritance nominatim, then provides “that the more remote degrees of kindred shall be determined by the rules of the canon law, as adopted and enforced in the English courts prior to the 4th day of July, 1776.” Georgia Code 1882, § 2484; *Wetter v. c. KINSMEN OF HALF BLOOD — (1) In General. — It is substantially stated above that the heir is, by the common law always, and under the modern scheme of succession with rare exceptions, selected from the intestate's relations by blood.¹ But blood is, at common law, recognized to be of two kinds; the whole or full blood and the half blood. A person is of the whole blood to another when they are both descended not only from the same ancestor but from the same couple of ancestors.² Two persons are said to be of the half blood to one another when they are descended from one common ancestor only.³

(2) By Common Law. — At common law the intestate's next collateral kinsman⁴ must, in order to be his heir, be his kinsman of the whole blood; a kinsman of the half blood could not inherit. Though there is a near kinsman of the half blood, not only will a more distant kinsman of the whole blood be admitted and the other wholly excluded, but, there being no kindred of the full blood, rather than go to the half blood, the estate escheats to the lord.⁵ This total exclusion of the half blood from the inheritance is not so much to be considered in the light of a rule of descent as of a rule of evidence — an auxiliary rule to carry into execution the common-law requirement that the inheritance shall continue in the blood of the first purchaser.⁶

(3) Under Succession Statutes — (a) In England. — The common-law rule has been altered to a considerable extent by the English statute amending the law of inheritance,⁷ under which a relation of the whole blood and his or her issue shall be preferred to a relation of the same degree of the half blood, and his or her issue, but the relations of the half blood are not excluded.⁸

(b) In United States — aa. ABOGATION OF COMMON-LAW RULE. — Since the common-law doctrine excluding the half blood is dependent upon and only useful in connection with the common-law rule or canon of descent that its course must be traced from the first purchaser, it can have no general application under a scheme of succession such as is established in the United States, in which the first-purchaser rule has been in some states wholly, and in all states largely, abrogated.⁹ It follows accordingly, as a general doctrine, that, independent of express statutory enactments, no distinction is admitted in the United States between the whole and the half blood.¹⁰ And looking to the

3. Half Blood Defined. — Two brothers who have the same father but different mothers are kindred of the half blood. 2 Bl. Com. 227.

4. Distinction Between Whole and Half Blood Affects Only Collateral Descent. — It is evident that questions of the whole blood and half blood can only arise in respect to collateral heirs. A man cannot be of the half blood to his ancestor. This is the reason why there was no possessio fratris of an estate tail; the descent of the estate being always under the statute de donis traced from the donee, the issue in tail taking as heir to him per formam doni, and not as heir to the last actual tenant in tail. Challis R. P. 190, citing Doe v. Whichelo, 8 T. R. 211.

5. Common-law Exclusion of Half Blood. — Litt., § 6; Bl. Com. 224, 227; Brown v. Brown, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 360.

Doctrine of Possessio Fratris. — One consequence of this doctrine, together with the rule seisina facit stipitem, is the doctrine of possessio fratris, which was this: If a man, being seized of land, had issue a son and a daughter by one woman, and a younger son by another woman, and the father died, and then the elder son entered and died, the daughter would have inherited the land as heir to her brother, who was the person last actually seized. The maxim in such cases is that the seizin or possessio fratris facit sororem esse haeredum. 2 Bl. Com. 227; Broom's Max. 53a. But had the elder son died without entry, then the younger son might have inherited, not as heir to his half-brother, but as heir to their common father, who was the person last actually seized. 2 Bl. Com. 227, citing 2 Hale Hist. C. L. 238.

express legislation on the subject, we find that in no state is the half blood wholly excluded; we even find that in some states the distinction between the whole and the half blood is completely abolished. In certain states the statutes declare collaterals of the half blood to be entitled equally with those of the full blood in equal degree.¹ There can be no doubt that, under these statutes, no preference will be shown, in the case of inheritance by half brothers and sisters, to those brothers and sisters who are related to the intestate on the side of one parent over those who are of his blood on the side of the other.²

bb. SUCCESSION TO ESTATES OF UNMARRIED INFANTS. — But in some of the United States it is provided that the estate which a minor, who died unmarried and without issue, derived from one of his parents, passes to the other children of the same parent.³ Here the estate of the deceased will not always go to his half brothers and sisters. If, for instance, he derived the estate from his father, the surviving children of the deceased father will take the deceased child's share in their father's estate to the exclusion of brothers and sisters of the half blood by the same mother but by a different father.⁴ This provision,

The general doctrine that, independent of express statutory enactment, no distinction is admitted between the whole and the half blood was asserted in Prescott v. Carr, 29 N. H. 453, 61 Am. Dec. 652, and distinctly recognized in Crowell v. Clough, 23 N. H. 207.

"Brothers and Sisters" Held to Include the Half Blood. — So where a statute directed that the estate should in certain cases descend to the brothers and sisters of the deceased person dying intestate, it was held that the term "brothers and sisters" included those of the half blood.

Next of Kin Held to Include the Half Blood. — And the term "next of kin" in other statutes has been construed to include the half blood. Hillhouse v. Chester, 3 Day (Conn.) 166, 3 Am. Dec. 265; McKinney v. Mellon, 3 Houst. (Del.) 277. So, under the South Carolina statute of 1791, which provided that "if the intestate shall leave no lineal descendant — father, mother, brother, or sister of the whole blood, or their children, or brother or sister of the half blood, or lineal ancestor — then the widow shall take two-thirds of the estate, and the remainder shall descend to the next of kin," it was held, where the nearest relations of the intestate were an uncle or aunt of the half blood and first cousins of the whole blood, that the former were entitled to take the whole personal and real estate in exclusion of the latter, since they were the next of kin. Karwon v. Lowdes, 2 Desaus. (S. Car.) 210; Perry v. Logan, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 202. First cousins of the whole and the half blood take equally as next of kin. Edwards v. Barksdale, 2 Hill Eq. (S. In an elaborate discussion, in Edwards v. Barksdale, 2 Hill Eq. (S. Car.) 416, Riley Eq. (S. Car.) 16, of the true construction of the statute under consideration, Chancellor Harper, in effect, said that the conclusion there reached was not at all inconsistent with the determination in the above-cited cases of Wren v. Carnes, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 405, and Lawson v. Perdriaux, 1 McCord L. (S. Car.) 456, that by the act of 1797, amending that of 1791, and providing that where there are a father or mother and brother and sister, they shall take equally, brother and sister of the whole blood only were meant. The chancellor said that upon the particular provisions of both acts construed together, he would certainly have arrived at the same conclusion.

however, is rather a restriction of the descent to the line of the parent from whom the estate came than an exclusion of the half blood; if the estate came from the father, the half brothers and sisters on the paternal side will probably inherit from the deceased infant.¹

cc. SUCCESSION TO ANCESTRAL ESTATES. — A somewhat analogous provision is found in a number of states in the proviso or exception contained in an enactment which may be stated substantially as follows: that kindred of the half blood inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree, unless the inheritance came to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift from some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestor must be excluded from such inheritance.² Here again the course of descent is restricted to the line through which the estate came, and the intestate's kindred of the half blood, who have none of the blood of the ancestor from whom it came in the manner indicated, are excluded from the inheritance.³ But the effect of these provisions is not necessarily a preference of the whole to the half blood;⁴ for here also the kindred of the half blood will inherit if they are in the line of succession — that is, if they are of the blood of the ancestor from whom the intestate's property came as an ancestral estate.⁵ If a person has any of the blood of the ancestor, however small the fractional part, he may, under these provisions, inherit as the intestate's next of kin equally with the whole blood.⁶ It is clear that, both under the statutes last referred to and those relating to the descent of the estate of a deceased minor, if the estate did not come to the deceased in the manner indicated, i. e., is not an ancestral estate, but is a new acquisition — that is, if it cannot be traced to some ancestor not common to the full and the half blood relation — no distinction whatever is allowed.⁷

But if there are no kindred of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate came, it will, as a general rule, go to the kindred of the intestate without common blood with such ancestor. Nesbit v. Bryan, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 468 (decided under Tenn. Act of 1784).

It is held that an ancestral estate which was derived from one of the decedent's parents will go to the decedent's brothers and sisters on the side of that parent, although they are not the issue of the decedent's other parent. Preference of Whole Blood in Succession by Brothers and Sisters. — In Pennsylvania there is an express postponement of brothers and sisters of the half blood to brothers and sisters of the whole blood and to parents, even when the half blood is that of the ancestor. Stark v. Stark, 55 Pa. St. 62. But the half brothers and sisters of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate came will inherit before relatives of the whole blood of more remote degree. Baker v. Chalfant, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 477; Simpson v. Hall, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 337. See also Hart's Appeal, 8 Pa. St. 32. There is, however, no distinction between the half and the whole blood in the case of inheritance by relatives more remote than brothers and sisters. Danner v. Shissler, 31 Pa. St. 289; May v. Espenshade, 3 Luz. Leg. Obs. (Pa.) 142; Dorsey v. Van Horn, 9 W. N. C. (Pa.) 95; Davis' Estate, 9 W. N. C. (Pa.) 479; Kiegl's Appeal, 12 W. N. C. (Pa.) 179. And see Graham's Estate, 6 W. N. C. dd. SUCCESSION BETWEEN BROTHERS AND SISTERS. — It is occasionally found that statutes which, either expressly or by implication, contain a general abolition of all distinction between the half and the whole blood, except the case of inheritance by the intestate's brothers and sisters, in which case a preference is given to the brothers and sisters of the whole blood. But this rule has received the approval of but very limited adoption,¹ and it does not effect any distinction between the half blood and the whole blood in the case of inheritance by collateral relatives more remote than brothers and sisters.² Under the statutes which give a preference to kindred of the whole blood in equal degree, brothers and sisters of the whole blood of course exclude those of the half blood.³ And, if the right of representation is in force, the children of a deceased brother or sister of the whole blood, since they occupy precisely the situation which their parents did, will take, to the exclusion of brothers and sisters of the half blood.⁴ But if there are only brothers and sisters of the half blood surviving, they will inherit rather than more remote relations.⁵

cc. STATUTES GIVING LARGER SHARE TO WHOLE BLOOD. — In a number of states, the collaterals of the half blood take only half as much as those of the whole blood, or (this is found in most though not all of these statutes) as ascendants.⁶

(4) Distribution of Personality. — Coming to the question as to application of the common-law rule in exclusion of the half blood to the case of succession to personal property, it would seem that, since the rule is but an outgrowth of the feudal doctrine that descent must be traced from the first purchaser, and that doctrine has probably never had any application to the distribution of personality, there can be little question but that the half will take equally with the whole blood if the statutes are silent upon the subject.⁷

7. No Distinction Between Whole and Half Blood in the Distribution of Personality. — Under the English statute of distributions, which simply directed distribution to be made among the next of kin of equal degree to the intestate, it was, after some contradictory decisions on the subject, finally settled in Crooke v. Watt, 2 Vern. 124, Show. P. C. 108, decided in 1690, that brothers and sisters of the half blood have

f. POSTHUMOUS CHILDREN. — Posthumous children inherit and take under statutes of succession in the same manner as if they had been born in the lifetime of the father, and were surviving heirs; the child in its mother's womb is considered as born for all purposes of its own interest, and takes by descent since its conception, provided it be capable of inheriting at the moment of its birth.¹

Must Be Born Alive. — But it is necessary that the child be born alive, for it is presumed when it is still-born that it never had life.²

Time of Birth. — And it is also necessary that the child should be born after such a period of foetal existence that its continuance in life might be reasonably expected.³ In some states, the time within which the posthumous child must be born is by statute fixed at ten months.⁴

VII. COURSE OF SUCCESSION — 1. General Outline — a. SPECIALLY DESIGNATED RELATIVES — (1) In General. — The state statutes generally prescribe the order in which the nearer relatives of the decedent shall take his property, by a designation of relationship instead of by computation of the degrees of kinship. Most of the statutes fix the order of succession by children and their descendants, the widow and husband, the father and mother, and the brothers and sisters, nominatim. Consequently, it is only where the decedent's property goes to kindred outside this series of especially designated relatives, that the method adopted for reckoning degrees of kinship is resorted to in determining the order of succession.⁵

an equal claim with those of the whole blood. 4 Burns Ecc. L. 422; Moor v. Barham, cited in Blackborough v. Davis, 1 P. Wms. 53; Burnet v. Mann, 1 Ves. 156, 1 Myl. & K. 672, note; Smith v. Tracy, 1 Mod. 209; Jessopp v. Watson, 1 Myl. & K. 665. See also Ector v. Grant, 112 Ga. 568.

So under statutes in the United States. Kelly v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555; Preston v. Hoskins, 2 Yeates, (Pa.) 545; Deadrick v. Armour, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 588. But see Lawson v. Perdriau, 1 McCord L. (S. Car.) 456.

Some statutes expressly provide that there shall be no distinction between the half and the whole blood in the distribution of personal property. See the statutes of Maryland, New York, and Pennsylvania. See Seekamp v. Hammer, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 9; Matter of Southworth, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 216; Hallett v. Hare, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 315.

Statutes Relating to Succession by Posthumous Children. — In a number of the United States it is expressly provided by statute that persons not in esse, but conceived at the time of the testator's death, inherit as if born at the time. Stim. Am. Stat. L., § 3135. Posthumous children of the intestate inherit as if living at his death in all states. Stim. Am. Stat. L., § 3136; Detrick v. Migatt, 19 Ill. 146, 68 Am. Dec. 584. And so in many states of all posthumous descendants of the intestate. See Stim. Am. Stat. L., § 3136. And in many states there is a general rule that, in all cases of succession, direct or collateral, posthumous children take both realty and personalty as if living at the death of the parent whom they represent. See designation of these states in Stim. Am. Stat. L., § 3136.

Posthumous Children of Half Blood may take where the half blood who are born before the intestate dies are permitted by law to take. See Burnet v. Mann, 1 Ves. 156, more fully and correctly reported in 1 Myl. & K. 672, note.

5. Course of Succession to Ancestral Estates. — The Rhode Island statute (Rev. of 1822, pp. 222, 223) provided that "when the title to any real estate of inheritance as to which the person having such title shall die intestate, came by descent, gift, or devise from the parent or other kindred of the intestate, and such intestate die without children, such estate shall go to the kin next to the intestate, of the blood of the person from whom such estate came or descended." It was considered that this last clause, directing the descent of ancestral es-

(2) Descendants.—The general rule in the United States is that all the children take in equal shares, both as to realty and to personalty, and that the issue of deceased children take the share of the parent by right of representation.¹

(3) Ascendants and Collaterals.—Besides providing specially for the succession by descendants, the statutes generally regulate the order in which the nearer ascendants and collaterals, as parents, husband, or wife, and brothers and sisters, shall stand in the course of succession. But the provisions which prescribe the order of succession by such relatives vary so radically in the different states that it would serve no practical purpose to set these provisions out here. Reference must be had to the statutes of the different states.²

b. NEXT OF KIN.—If there are none of the series of specially named relatives, which generally consists of the decedent's descendants, parents, husband or wife, brothers and sisters, surviving him, his estate goes to his next of kin,³ it being sometimes provided that those who claim through the tates to "next of kin," etc., did not direct the descent of such estate to "next of kin" in the strict sense of those terms as understood by the civilians, but that the course of descent of such estates, as well as estates acquired by the intestate, was directed and controlled by the first and subsequent clauses prior to the last, which by the terms of the first clause extended to "any estate of inheritance." It was held that where A died without issue, leaving an estate which came to her by descent from a deceased brother, such estate passed in equal shares to her mother, brothers, and sisters, they being, by the rule established by the statute, of the same degree of kindred to the intestate. Smith v. Smith, 4 R. I. 1, affirmed in Pierce v. Pierce, 14 R. I. 514.

1. Succession by Children.—The deceased left grandchildren and also a wife surviving. Although the Indiana statute concerning descents provided "that if a husband or wife die intestate, leaving no child and no father or mother, the whole of his property, real and personal, shall go to the survivor," it was held that the widow could not under this provision inherit the whole of the estate to the exclusion of the grandchildren. Kyle v. Kyle, 18 Ind. 108. See also Scott v. Silvers, 64 Ind. 76.

In Indiana the meaning of "child" was held controlled by the context. But in Texas, under a statute containing similar provisions, it was held that "child" or "children" did not include grandchildren or remoter descendants. Burgess v. Hargrove, 64 Tex. 110; Cartwright v. Moore, 66 Tex. 55; McKinney v. Moore, 73 Tex. 470. See also the title CHILD—CHILDREN, vol. 5, p. 1085 et seq.

Death of Minor Children Before Administration.—The statutes sometimes provide, in effect, that if any minor child shall die, unmarried, before any legal disposition of the estate, the portion of such deceased child shall be equally divided among the surviving children and their legal representatives. See Hale's Appeal, 69 Conn. 611.

Succession by Descendants.—See the title DESCENDANT, vol. 9, p. 390.

2. Succession by Specially Designated Ascendants and Collaterals.—See 1 Stim. Am. Stat. L., art. 310; Thatcher v. Thatcher, 17 Colo. 404; Estes v. Nicholson, 39 Fla. 759. See also Matter of Parker, 97 Iowa 593; In re Foley, 24

Nev. 197; Barber v. Brundage, 169 N. Y. 368, affirming 50 N. Y. App. Div. 124; Wright v. Wright, 100 Tenn. 313.

In England it is a rule controlling the descent of real property that on failure of issue the inheritance shall go to the intestate's lineal ancestors or their issue, each of the ancestors taking in preference to his issue, but so that a nearer lineal ancestor and his issue are to be preferred to a more remote lineal ancestor and his issue other than such nearer ancestor and his issue. 2 Broom & Had. Bl. 377. But the course of distribution prescribed by the English statute of distributions is more in accordance with the order of succession in the United States. See R. & L. L. Dict., tit. Next of Kin.

In the Indian Territory it is held that the mother of an intestate inherits his estate subject to the wife's dower interest in the real estate and one-third interest in the personalty. Nivens v. Nivens, (Indian Ter. 1901) 64 S. W. Rep. 604.

3. Succession by Next of Kin.—See various state statutes. A Rhode Island statute (Rev. Stat. 1844, 237) provided that if there be no child, nor father, nor mother, nor sister, nor descendants of either, "the inheritance shall go in equal moieties to the paternal and maternal kindred." It was held, under the provision of the same statute that when "the inheritance is directed to go by moieties to the paternal and maternal kindred, if there be no such kindred on the one part, the whole estate shall go to the other part," that so long as there are any kindred, however remote, on the part of the paternal line, they take one moiety of the estate, and the inheritance, after once being divided, cannot be again united, and descend in one line until there ceases to be a representative of the other line. Cozzens v. Joslin, 1 R. I. 122.

Succession by Parents.—Under a statute providing that on the death of an intestate without children his lands "shall descend equally to the next of kin in equal degree, and those who represent them, computing by the rules of the civil law," the father and mother of the intestate are his next of kin, and they take the land equally as tenants in common. Brown v. Baraboo, 90 Wis. 151.

Succession by Grandparents.—Where none of the series of specially designated relatives sur-

c. ESCHEAT. — Provisions to the effect that when a person dies intestate, leaving real property and no heirs or person entitled to succeed under the law of descents, or when a person dies intestate leaving personal estate not required for debts and there is no person entitled thereto under the statutes of distributions, the property escheats either to the state, county, town, or otherwise, are commonly found in the statutes of the different states.²

2. As Affected by Common-law Canons of Descent — a. IN GENERAL. — Although the law of succession established in the United States by the various statutes of descent and distribution is generally considered as having wholly supplanted the common law, the common-law rules or canons of descent, notwithstanding that they all savor more or less of feudal policy, and that some of them are warranted by no other than feudal considerations, have yet had sufficient influence upon the law to demand consideration. There are seven of these rules or canons, as follows: first, the rule that inheritances shall not lineally ascend; second, the rule preferring the male to the female issue and stock; third, the rule of primogeniture among males; fourth, the rule giving the right of representation; fifth, the rule that descent must be traced from the first purchaser; sixth, the rule excluding collateral kinsmen of the half blood from the inheritance; seventh, the rule that, in all collateral inheritance, the male stocks shall be preferred to the female, unless where the lands have in fact descended from a female.³ The fifth and sixth of these rules have already been considered,⁴ and only the others will be here dwelt upon.

vive the intestate — i. e., where he leaves no descendants, husband or wife, parents or brothers and sisters — the next in the line of succession must be the grandparents. Grandparents take precedence of uncles and aunts unless the statutes provide otherwise.

The New York statutes have been construed to give the brothers and sisters of an intestate preference over his grandparents. Matter of Marsh, (Surrogate Ct.) 5 Misc. (N. Y.) 428.

Succession by Next of Kin After Grandparents. — Next after grandparents in the order of succession are the decedent's nephews and nieces, uncles and aunts and great-grandparents, for all are related to him in the third degree. And it has been held that uncles and aunts and nephews and nieces, being in equal degree, share equally on distribution in default of nearer kindred. Durant v. Prestwood, 1 Atk. 454; Hurtin v. Proal, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 414; Matter of Healy, (Surrogate Ct.) 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 352.

Uncles and aunts usually take to the exclusion of cousins. Dodge v. Lewis, 71 N. H. 324.

Great-grandparents have precedence over great uncles and aunts. Cloud v. Bruce, 61 Ind. 171; Sturgeon v. Hustead, 196 Pa. St. 148.

Next in the order of succession stand first cousins, great uncles and aunts, and great-great-grandparents; all these stand in the fourth degree. Hence it has been held that a great-uncle and a first cousin, both being related in equal degree to the person last seized, and being his nearest surviving kindred, are entitled to succeed to his land in equal moieties. Smith v. Gaines, 35 N. J. Eq. 65.

b. RULE THAT INHERITANCE SHALL NOT LINEALLY ASCEND. — The common-law rule that inheritances shall never lineally ascend¹ has been done away with in England.² And no vestige of it seems to remain in any, save one,³ of the United States.⁴

c. PREFERENCE OF MALE TO FEMALE ISSUE AND STOCK — In England. — The second common-law rule, by which the male issue shall be admitted before the female, is still preserved as a part of the English law of descent.⁵ The seventh common-law rule, which requires that, in collateral inheritances, the male stocks shall always be preferred to the female, has been recognized by the English law in a provision which provides, in effect, that each male ancestor and his ancestors, whether male or female, and his and their issue, shall be preferred to all other female ancestors and their ancestors, whether male or female, and their issue.⁶ But by the English statute of distributions, which was based upon the 118th Novel of Justinian, by which all distinction between the sexes in the Roman law of succession was destroyed, and males and females were admitted to an equality in the right of succession,⁷ no preference is given to the male over the female issue or stock.⁸

In the United States all the children, females as well as males, inherit, in general, equally together, subject in some instances to the right of the eldest to the family mansion or homestead, on his paying to the others their respective shares of its value.⁹ Neither does the common-law preference of the male to the female stock obtain in the United States,¹⁰ except to

1. Statement of Rule Against Inheritance by Ascendants. — The rule is thus stated and illustrated by Littleton: If there be father and son, and the father has a brother, who is therefore uncle to the son, and the son purchase land in fee simple, and die without issue, living his father, the uncle shall have the land as heir to the son, and not the father, although the latter is nearer in blood, because it is a maxim in law that the inheritance may lineally descend but not ascend. Yet, if the son in this case die without issue, and his uncle enter into the land as heir to the son, and afterwards the uncle die without issue, living the father, the father shall have the land as heir to the uncle, and not as heir to the son, for he should rather come to the land by collateral descent than by lineal ascent. It was, moreover, a necessary consequence of this rule, coupled with the maxim, seising facit stipitem, that if, in the instance above put, the uncle did not enter into the land, the father could not inherit it, because a man claiming as heir in fee simple by descent must make himself heir to him who was last seized of the actual freehold and inheritance; and if the uncle, therefore, did not enter, he would have had but a freehold in law, and no actual freehold, and the last person seized of the actual freehold was the son, to whom the father could not make himself heir. Broom's Leg. Max. 327, citing Co. Litt. 11b.

But, even at common law, if the father happened to be also cousin to the son, and as such, his heir, he would, in that remoter capacity, inherit immediately from the son. Eastwood v. Vinke, 2 P. Wms. 614.

2. Abrogation of the Rule in England. — 2 Broom & Had. Bl. 371.

3. Status of the Rule in the United States. — In New Jersey, the rule of the common law that inheritances shall not lineally ascend, although modified so as to let in the father and to some extent the mother, has not been abolished. Taylor v. Bray, 32 N. J. L. 182, affirmed in Bray v. Taylor, 36 N. J. L. 415. And see Smith v. Gaines, 35 N. J. Eq. 65.

4. It has been held that a mother inherits the estate of her child, though not specially named in the statute of descents and distributions, when she is the next of kin, and no person is living to whom the statute gives precedence over her. Loftis v. Glass, 15 Ark. 680; Macomb v. Miller, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 265; Miller v. Macomb, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 229; McCullough v. Lee, 7 Ohio (pt. 1) 15; Owen v. Cogbill, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 487.

8. Male Not Preferred to Female Issue and Stock by the Statute of Distributions. — This was established as early as 1723. Moor v. Barham, cited in Blackborough v. Davis, 1 P. Wms. 53.

9. Abrogation of the Preference of Male to Female Issue. — For a collation of the various statutes upon this head, see Stimson's Am. Stat. Law, §§ 3101 and 3102. In some states the rule has been abolished formally; as, for example, in New Jersey, North Carolina, and Virginia. See Bray v. Taylor, 36 N. J. L. 415; Fidler v. Higgins, 21 N. J. Eq. 138; Bell v. Dozier, 1 Dev. L. (12 N. Car.) 333; Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. (Va.) 355.

10. Abrogation of Preference of Male to Female Stock. — See Bassil v. Loffer, 38 Iowa 451; Albee v. Vose, 76 Me. 448; Brown v. Burlingham, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 418; McCracken v. Rogers, 6 Wis. 278.

But in Hunt v. Kingston, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 309, it was held, by the Court of Common Pleas, where an intestate left a great-uncle and great-aunts and the descendants of a very limited extent.¹

d. PRIMOGENITURE AMONG MALES. — The rule that where there are two or more males in equal degree, the eldest only shall inherit, but the females altogether,² is still the law in England,³ but not in any of the United States, primogeniture having been abolished, sometimes expressly and sometimes by the establishment of another course of descent.⁴

e. RIGHT OF REPRESENTATION — (1) Definition. — Representation is that rule of law by which the children, or their descendants, of a deceased person who, if he had lived, would have taken property by virtue of an intestacy, stand in his place so as to take the property which he would have taken had he lived. These representatives take neither more nor less than, but just so much as, their principals would have done. As, if there be two sisters and one of them dies leaving six daughters, and then the father of the two sisters dies without other issue, these six daughters take among them exactly the same as their mother would have taken had she been living.⁵

Per Stirpes and Per Capita. — This taking by representation is called succession in stirpes, according to the roots; all the branches of each root taking the share which the root it represents would have taken; the term is used in distinction from taking per capita, where each takes as next of kin to the deceased in his own right.

(2) Common-law Rule — Statement of the Rule. — It is a rule or canon of descent of the common law that the lineal descendants of any person deceased shall represent their ancestor; that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done had he been living.⁶

Representation in Lineal Descent. — Thus, in lineal descent, the child, or great-grandchild, either male or female, of the eldest son will, by the common law, succeed before the younger son, and so in infinitum.⁷

Representation in Collateral Descent. — By the common law this rule is of great importance in collateral descent, for the effect of the doctrine is that, on failure of issue of the person last seized, the inheritance will descend to the other subsisting issue of his next immediate ancestor. Thus, the issue of the intestate's brother will succeed to the inheritance before those of his uncle, and the latter before those of his great-uncle.⁸

Reason for the Rule. — The common-law mode of representation is the necessary consequence of the double preference which that law gives first to the male issue and next to the first-born among the males; for if all the children of three sisters were to claim per capita, in their own right as next of kin to the ancestor, without any respect to the stock whence they sprung, and those children were partly male and partly female, then the eldest male among great-aunts, that, as the New York statute of descents included no collateral relation more distant than uncles and aunts, the common-law rule preferring the male to the female stock still obtained, and that the uncle inherited to the exclusion of the females of the same degree and their descendants. Compare Brown v. Burlingham, 5 and f. (N. Y.) 418.

1. Limited Preference of Male to Female Stock. — Statutes frequently prefer the father to the mother. See the various state statutes; and see in reference thereto Kelly v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555; Magness v. Arnold, 31 Ark. 103; Shadden v. Hembree, 17 Oregon 14; De Vault v. De Vault, (Tenn. Ch. 1898) 48 S. W. Rep. 361; Jones v. Barnett, 30 Tex. 637.

See Auger v. Taylor, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 260, construing an early Vermont statute, and holding that the intestate's brothers took double the proportion of his sisters.

2. Primogeniture. — 2 Bl. Com. 214.

3. Wms. Real Prop. 102; 2 Broom & Had. Bl. 383.

4. Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 178; Eslava v. Doe, 7 Ala. 543; Davis v. Rowe, 6 Rand. (Va.) 355. But see Walton v. Willis, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 351.

5. Representation Defined. — Stallworth v. Stallworth, 29 Ala. 79.

6. Representation by the Common Law. — 2 Bl. Com. 217.

7. Hale Hist. C. L. 236, 237.

8. 4 Bl. Com. 225.

The rule that when the estate descended upon collaterals the lineal descendants in infinitum of any of such collaterals as were deceased should represent such deceased is an admitted principle of the common law. Fidler v. Higgins, 21 N. J. Eq. 138; Schenck v. Vail, 24 N. J. Eq. 538.

them would exclude not only his own brethren and sisters, but all the issue of the other two daughters.¹

(3) Civil-law Rule. — Since the Roman law did not prefer either the male to the female issue or the male to the female stock, it differed somewhat from the common law. By the Roman law, the right of representation continued in infinitum in the descending line, and, in all cases, the inheritance always descended in stirpes.² But in collateral succession the rule of the Roman law differed from the common law; for, according to the former, the division of the estate among collaterals per stirpes took place only where the persons succeeding to the inheritance were of unequal degree; representation had no place where such persons stood in equal degree.³

(4) Statutory Rules — (a) In General. — It is to be expected that in the United States, where neither the common-law preference of males nor the doctrine of primogeniture is in force, the right of representation will be found to depart considerably from that of the common law.⁴ The statutes of the different states are, touching this subject, at considerable variance with each other. Those of a large number of the states contain provisions securing the right of representation among certain specified relatives. Other provisions which limit the right of representation within certain degrees of relationship are frequently met with. But while the common-law doctrine has been extensively modified, the question as to whether the right to take by representation exists may still have an important bearing in ascertaining the persons entitled to share in the succession and may also make a material difference in the shares which the respective heirs take.⁵

(b) In Lineal Descent. — The right to take by representation is secured to the descendants of the intestate's children in probably all the states.⁶ Some of the statutes which secure the right of representation in the intestate's descending line, enact, in substance, that the "heirs" of a deceased child of the intestate shall stand in the place of that child. While the word "heir" is not technically limited to children, it would yet seem that the term, as here employed, does not confer the right on other than the descendants of such child.⁷

1. 2 Bl. Com. 218.

2. Representation by the Civil Law. — 4 Kent's Com. 379. Thus, if one of three daughters died leaving ten children, and then the father died, the two surviving daughters had each one-third of his effects, and the ten grandchildren had the remaining third divided between them; and so, if all the daughters had died before the father leaving, respectively, ten, six, and two children, the estate would have been divided into three parts, going in stirpes to the offspring of each daughter.

3. 2 Bl. Com. 217, 517; Just. Inst. III. i. 6.

4. Statutory Limitation of the Right. — In Schenck v. Vail, 24 N. J. Eq. 538, overruling Fidler v. Higgins, 21 N. J. Eq. 138, it was decided that the common-law right of indefinite representation was abrogated by the New Jersey statute, though there was no express provision to that effect. In this case the ill effects of admitting the right indefinitely were illustrated by the number of claimants, one hundred and thirty-nine. The court pointed out that "an illimitable dispersion of the title to inheritable land" might result from the recognition of the right, a result checked in England by the principles of primogeniture and the preference of males.

5. Effect of Representation. — In Wetter v. Habersham, 60 Ga. 193, the facts were as follows: The intestate left surviving grandchildren of an aunt, and also great-grandchildren of a deceased brother, who were the children of a deceased grandchild of such brother. In Georgia, the estate would, in this case, go to the kindred of the intestate according to the computation of the canon law. And, according to this method of reckoning degrees of kindred, the grandchildren of the aunt were in the third, and the great-grandchildren of the brother in the fourth degree. But it was also provided that there should be representation as far as grandchildren of brothers and sisters. It was held that under these provisions the grandchildren of the aunt were entitled to the inheritance.

6. Representation in Lineal Descent. — 1 Woern. Am. L. Adm. 146. See Healey v. Cole, 95 Me. 272; Payne v. Harris, 3 Strobb. Eq. (S. Car.) 39.

The provision of the Massachusetts statute (Pub. Stat. 1882, c. 125, § 1) declaring that the estate of an intestate shall be distributed "in equal shares to his children and to the issue of any deceased child by right of representation," was declared to affirm the rule that all lineal descendants, in whatever degree, shall share in the estate. Bigelow v. Morong, 103 Mass. 287.

7. "Heirs of Such Child" as used in an Iowa statute has been held not to include the widowed mother of a child who died before his

(c) In Collateral Succession — In General. — It is with regard to the right of representation among collaterals that the lack of harmony in these statutory provisions is presented.

Representation by Descendants of Intestate's Brothers and Sisters. — The statutes frequently provide for succession, in certain cases, of the "children," "issue," "descendants," or "representatives" of deceased brothers and sisters of the intestate. These phrases convey the right of representation unless it is specially limited by other provisions. The right to take by representation is, either by statutes of this kind or by others of a more specific character, secured, in some states, to the children of the brothers and sisters of the intestate;¹ in other states, to the grandchildren of his brothers and sisters;² and in others, to the lineal descendants of brothers and sisters, through all descending generations.³ The provision of the statutes commonly is that, where certain relatives survive, the estate shall go to brothers and sisters and "children" or "issue," etc., of deceased brothers and sisters. If the surviving relatives are those specified, so that the course of succession will be controlled by such provision, the right of representation will be as above stated. But if father. McMenomy v. McMenomy, 22 Iowa 148; Journell v. Leighton, 49 Iowa 601; Overdieck's Will, 50 Iowa 244. See Leonard v. Lining, 57 Iowa 648. The provision of the statute under which these cases arose was afterwards changed so as to establish expressly a rule in conformity with these decisions. See Blackman v. Wadsworth, 65 Iowa 80.

In Louisiana, by express provisions of the statutes, representation takes place ad infinitum in the direct descending line, but does not take place in favor of ascendants, the nearest in degree always excluding those of a degree superior or more remote. Louisiana Rev. Code 1875.

1. Representation of Children of Deceased Brothers and Sisters. — It is provided in California, Michigan, and Nebraska that an intestate's estate shall in certain cases go to children of deceased brothers and sisters by right of representation. Deering's Civ. Code Cal., 1885, § 1386; How. Annot. Stat. Mich., 1882, § 5772a; Comp. Stat. Neb., c. 23. In South Carolina, in certain cases, it will go to brothers and sisters, children of a deceased brother or sister to take the share which their parent would have had. Gen. Stat. S. Car., 1882, § 1845.

In Maryland, it is provided that in certain cases the estate shall go to brothers and sisters and their descendants. Pub. Gen. Laws Md., art. 46, §§ 19, 20, 27. But this is limited by the provision that no representation is admitted among collaterals after brothers' and sisters' children.

Right of Representation Given to Brothers' and Sisters' "Children." has been held not to include grandchildren. Matter of Curry, 39 Cal. 529. To the same effect, see Poang v. Gadsden, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 293.

Under the Massachusetts statute of distributions (Gen. Stat., c. 91, § 1; c. 94, § 16), which provided that if a person died intestate, leaving no issue, and no father nor mother, his estate went in equal shares to his "brothers and sisters, and to the children of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation;" and "if he leaves no issue, and no father, mother, brother, nor sister, then to his next of kin in equal degree," it was held that where an intestate left no issue, father nor mother, but left one sister, children of another sister, and children of deceased children of a third sister, these grand-nephews or grand-nieces could not share in the distribution. The court, by Gray, J., said: "The distinction between the words 'children' and 'issue' is carefully preserved throughout. 'Issue' necessarily includes children; but 'children' does not include more remote issue." Bigelow v. Morong, 103 Mass. 287. But, under the statute passed in 1876, which re-enacted the first clause above quoted, with the substitution of the word "issue" for the word "children," it would seem that in a case like the above, the grandchildren of a deceased sister would take a share of the estate. See Conant v. Kent, 130 Mass. 178.

2. Representation by Grandchildren of Deceased Brothers and Sisters. — As in Maine, Pennsylvania, and Georgia. See Quinby v. Higgins, 14 Me. 309; Davis v. Stinson, 53 Me. 493; Reynolds, Appellant, 57 Me. 350; Lane's Appeal, 28 Pa. St. 487; Brenneman's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 115; Hayes's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 256; Lindley's Appeal, 102 Pa. St. 258.

Under such a statute, a surviving brother has been held to exclude the great-grandchildren of a deceased sister. Stetson v. Eastman, 84 Me. 366.

3. Representation by Descendants of Deceased Brothers and Sisters. — See the statutes of Illinois, Texas, Mississippi, Connecticut, Ohio, Louisiana, Tennessee, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, New York. See Hannan v. Osborn, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 336.

As to the construction of the Alabama statute, see Hitchcock v. Smith, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 29; Stallworth v. Stallworth, 29 Ala. 76.

At to the Missouri statute, see Copenhaver v. Copenhaver, 78 Mo. 55, 9 Mo. App. 200.

As to the New Jersey statute of 1780, see Rodman v. Smith, 2 N. J. L. 3. Here the statute gave the right to succeed by representation to the "issue" of deceased brothers and sisters, and the court said: "The word 'issue,' in legal as well as common acceptation, comprehends all the descendants of an ancestor, however remote." See also ISSUE (DESCENDANTS), vol. 17, p. 542.

such provision is not to be applied, as where the facts of the case are such that the course of descent is directed by a clause in the statute which provides that, given a certain state of facts, the estate shall go to the intestate's next of kin, it has been held that there is no representation; so that, in cases where the children or issue of deceased brothers and sisters take merely as next of kin, and not by special mention in the statute, only those of equal degree take, the more remote being excluded.¹

Restriction of the Right. — Except in a very few of the United States,² the right of representation in collateral succession is restricted to near kindred by the use of express words to that effect. In some states, by the express provisions of the statutes, no representation is admitted among collaterals after brothers' and sisters' children.³ And in other states this right is restricted to the descendants of brothers and sisters.⁴ And even though the statutes do not restrict the right of representation to near kindred by the use of express words to that effect, the same general result may be effected by the necessary implication of the general spirit and purpose of the statutes.⁵

Effect of Statutes Restricting the Right. — The effect of these provisions is to limit or qualify the right of representation among collaterals, so that, in the case of succession by relatives farther removed from the intestate than those in the cases excepted, they can take only in their own right as next of kin per capita.⁶ So, under those provisions which deny the right of representation to collaterals after brothers' and sisters' children, or give the right to the children of deceased brothers and sisters, the intestate's grand nephews and nieces cannot represent their deceased parents so as to take with surviving nephews and nieces.⁷ Under a statute which limits representation to the children of the intestate's brothers and sisters, the intestate's grandparent takes to the exclusion of his uncles and aunts.⁸ And where one dies intestate, leaving uncles and aunts and the children of other deceased uncles and aunts, the former take to the exclusion of the latter.⁹ And if the intestate leaves

Am. Stat. L., § 3138. See Neville v. Bradley, 126 N. Car. 72; Dexter v. Dexter, 4 Mason (U. S.) 302; Fisk v. Fisk, 60 N. J. Eq. 195; Daboll v. Field, 9 R. I. 289.

By the Pennsylvania Act of 1833, representation among collaterals went no further than brothers' and sisters' children, but by Act of 1855, it was extended to the grandchildren of brothers and sisters and the children of uncles and aunts. Lane's Appeal, 28 Pa. St. 487.

8. Uncles and Aunts. — McDowell v. Addams, 45 Pa. St. 430. But by the Act of May 25, 1887 (P. L. 260) it was provided that children and descendants of deceased grandparents shall represent such deceased grandparents whenever grandparents are entitled as next of kin. Whitaker's Estate, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 387, 5 Pa. Dist. 83.

So under the Maryland Act of 1820. Porter v. Askew, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 346; Elwood v. Lannon, 27 Md. 200; Levering v. Heighe, 2 Md. Ch. 81; Levering v. Heighe, 3 Md. Ch. 365; Ellicott v. Ellicott, 2 Md. Ch. 468. And under first and second cousins, the latter cannot take by representation.¹ Grand-uncles and grand-aunts, when next of kin, will take the inheritance, to the exclusion of the children and grandchildren of grand-uncles who have died before the intestate.² Children of a deceased great-great-uncle take to the exclusion of grandchildren of the same uncle.³ When the statutes extend the right of representation to brothers' and sisters' "children," "descendants," "issue," or "representatives," or when they so restrict the right, they invariably refer to the brothers and sisters of the intestate, even though they do not make use of the phrase "of the intestate" or its equivalent.⁴

(d) When Heirs Are of Equal Degree — aa. IN LINEAL DESCENT. — There can, of course, be no question but that in the case of distribution to or descent cast upon children where some of the children are living, and others dead, leaving issue, the share to which each of the deceased children would, if living, have been entitled, goes to the issue of each respectively; such issue, in this case, take per stirpes.⁵ But, in case all the surviving descendants are related to the intestate in the same degree, there is, in the absence of statutory regulations,⁶ some conflict of opinion as to whether they take per stirpes or per capita.

View that Succession Must Be Per Stirpes. — It is the law in some of the United States that the succession must invariably be per stirpes, where the estate descends or is to be distributed among the kindred in the intestate's direct descending line; although all such heirs stand in the same degree of consanguinity to the intestate, they, nevertheless, take per stirpes.⁷ This has been held to be the rule under the English statute of distributions,⁸ and is in conformity with the rule of the Roman law.⁹ the New Hampshire Act of 1789. Parker v. Nims, 2 N. H. 460.

This was the rule under the Pennsylvania Act of 1833. Good v. Herr, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 253, 42 Am. Dec. 236; Herr v. Herr, 5 Pa. St. 428, 47 Am. Dec. 416; Parr v. Bankhart, 22 Pa. St. 291; Montgomery v. Petriken, 29 Pa. St. 118. But this was changed by the Act of April 27, 1855, under which such children take the share which their parents would have had if living. Hayes's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 256; Haines's Estate, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 401.

And it has been held that this provision of the Act of 1855 was not repealed by the Act of June, 1885 (P. L. 251), providing for a per capita distribution where the distributees stand in the same degree of consanguinity to the intestate. McConnell's Estate, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 120. See also Smith's Estate, 10 Pa. Dist. 92.

But grandchildren of uncles and aunts do not participate with children of uncles and aunts, when there is no grandparent living, even under the Act of May 25, 1887 (P. L. 260), providing that children and descendants of grandparents represent such grandparents. White's Estate, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 395, 5 Pa. Dist. 103; Bamber's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. 536.

Under a state of things such as is described in the text, the facts as fixed at the death of an intestate have been held in New Jersey to determine the right of his uncles and aunts to his inheritance, though the statute gives a life estate to his surviving mother. Bailey v. Ross, 32 N. J. Eq. 544.

L. 251), that kindred, whether lineal or collateral, who stand in the same degree of consanguinity to the intestate, shall take in equal shares. See Cremer's Estate, 156 P. St. 40; Smith's Estate, 10 Pa. Dist. 92. As to the rule in Virginia, see Moore v. Conner, (Va. 1800) 20 S. E. Rep. 936.

9. See supra, this section, Civil-law Rule.

View that Succession Must Be Per Capita. — But it has been asserted by eminent authority that "the rule of representation applies only from necessity, or where there are lineal heirs in different degrees, as children and the children of a deceased child, or brothers and sisters and the children of a deceased brother or sister."¹ And it is provided by statute in a number of states that, where all the lineal descendants of the intestate are in equal degree, they shall take per capita, but otherwise per stirpes.² Where this is the law, if grandchildren alone survive the intestate, they take equally, or per capita, as next in degree or nearest in kin.³ In harmony with this theory, it has been held that, if a person dies intestate, without leaving any child surviving, but leaving grandchildren and great-grandchildren, the latter being the descendants of a deceased grandchild, the grandchildren are entitled per capita, taking share and share alike without regard to the number of the children of the intestate, and the great-grandchildren are entitled per stirpes, taking together the share which the deceased grandchild would have taken.⁴

46. IN COLLATERAL SUCCESSION — General Rule. — In collateral succession, the right of representation exists, as has been shown above, to a limited extent. And, in the case of succession by relatives within the limits prescribed for representation, it seems to be a general rule that where such relatives are in equal degree they will take per capita, but where they stand in unequal degree, or claim by representation, then they will take per stirpes.⁵

Reason for the Rule. — Where the claimants stand in unequal degree, then the doctrine of representation is necessary, to prevent the exclusion of those in the remoter degree. So, in the case of the survival of a brother or sister, and children of deceased brothers and sisters, such children take per stirpes.⁶ But when the claimants all stand in equal degree, as three nephews, three grand-nephews, etc., they take per capita, or each an equal share; because in this case representation, or taking per stirpes, is not necessary to prevent the exclusion of those in a remoter degree, and a more just and equal division of the intestate's property is effected without it.⁷

Illustrations of the Rule. — It has been held accordingly that when the intestate leaves, as his next of kin, nephews and nieces, the children of different brothers or sisters, such nephews and nieces take in equal shares, or per capita.⁸ This

Under the English statute of distributions, if a person dies without children, leaving a widow and mother, brother and sister, and two nieces by a deceased brother, the widow would, according to the established doctrine, take a moiety, and the mother, brother, and sister would each take one-fourth and the nieces the other one-fourth of the remaining moiety. This point was ruled in Keylway v. Keylway, 2 P. Wms. 347; and the doctrine was declared to be correct by Lord Hardwicke in Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 457.

In Bamber's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. 536, it was held that the descendants of an intestate's grandparents could not take by representation unless one or more grandparents survived the intestate.

Per Capita or Per Stirpes. — A Pennsylvania statute (Act of June, 1885) directs that persons "shall take in equal shares" whenever the persons upon whom the law casts the descent or who take as distributees are of the same degree of consanguinity to the decedent. In Cremer's Estate, 156 Pa. St. 40, it was held that where the persons entitled were all first cousins of the intestate, they took per capita and not per stirpes.

In Connecticut nephews and nieces have been held to take per stirpes. Kennedy v. Kennedy, is the construction of the English statute of distributions,¹ viz., that claimants standing in equal degree take per capita and not per stirpes. The brothers and sisters of the intestate all being dead, their representatives in equal degree, to wit, their children, become themselves principals, as standing next in degree of relationship to the intestate, and take in their own right. By the operation of the general rule stated above, if one or more collaterals claim in their own right, that is, by reason of propinquity to the intestate, and the claim of the others rests upon the representation of a deceased parent or ancestor, who, if living, would be in the same degree of relationship with the former, then the latter take per stirpes, that is, they collectively take as much as the deceased parent or ancestor would have taken, while the former take per capita.²

VIII. DOCTRINE OF SHIFTING INHERITANCE — Common Law. — It is a doctrine of the common law that, although lands may, by the operation of the feudal rule that the freehold should not be in abeyance, descend to him who is heir at the intestate's death, this inheritance may be divested at any time if there should come into existence another person whose degree of consanguinity to the ancestor is such that, had he been alive at the time of the descent cast, he would have excluded the person who has actually taken.³

Modern English Rule. — The rule of the modern English law that on failure of lineal descendants, or issue of the purchaser, the inheritance shall descend to his nearest lineal ancestor, has put an end to the possibility of a shifting inheritance, except in the single case of the birth of a posthumous child.⁴

Status of the Doctrine in the United States. — The rule of shifting inheritance has been recognized in some of the United States,⁵ but in others it has, by judicial decision, been rejected as being an inconvenient rule which was grounded on feudal reasons and was merely an incident to the now universally superseded common-law canons of descent, and which is inconsistent with the modern theory of intestate succession.⁶ And to prevent the evil of a shifting inher-

In Kentucky the statutory provision is that if any or all of the class first entitled to inherit are dead, leaving descendants, such descendants shall take per stirpes. Gen. Stat. (Bul. & Fel. 1888, c. 31, § 2.)

Maryland — District of Columbia. — It is held in Maryland that nephews and nieces will take per stirpes. McComas v. Amos, 29 Md. 132. And the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has reached the same conclusion. Iglehart v. Holt, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 68.

In New York this was formerly not the law. In Jackson v. Thurman, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 322, it was held that where the intestate's nearest heirs were a nephew by a brother deceased, and two nephews by another brother deceased, such nephews would inherit per stirpes. The statute under which this case was decided has been abrogated, and the law is now in accord with the text. Pond v. Bergh, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 140.

In North Carolina, it has been decided that collateral heirs, even if of equal degree, take per stirpes. Clement v. Cauble, 2 Jones Eq. (55 N. Car.) 82; Haynes v. Johnson, 5 Jones Eq. (58 N. Car.) 124; Cromartie v. Kemp, 66 N. Car. 382.

In Pennsylvania, under the Act of 1833, the per stirpes rule obtains among collaterals. Davis's Estate, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 256, 38 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 34; Brenneman's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 115; Hayes's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 256.

But in Grant v. Bustin, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (21 N. Car.) 77, it was held that under the statute for the distribution of intestate estates, no person could take as next of kin who was not in esse or en ventre sa mere at the time of the intestate's death.

⁶ Abrogation of the Doctrine in the United States. — Bates v. Brown, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 711, construing the statutes of Illinois; Cox v. Matthews, 17 Ind. 367; Drake v. Rogers, 13 Ohio St. 21, overruling Dunn v. Evans, 7 Ohio (pt. 1)

ance, the statutes now sometimes require from the heir the capacity of taking at the intestate's death,¹ or limit the right of succession to persons born within a prescribed time, viz., ten months, after the death of the intestate.² In this connection it is important to remember that this doctrine of shifting inheritance should not be confused with the right of posthumous children to succeed to an estate.³

IX. SUCCESSION BY AND FROM BASTARDS—1. By Common Law.—With respect to the right of inheritance, a bastard is, by the common law, considered quasi nullius filius.⁴ And, being nobody's son, he is incapable of becoming heir to either his ascendants or collaterals. Moreover, as a bastard cannot become heir himself, so neither can he have any ancestral or collateral heirs—he can have no heirs but those of his own body.⁵ The common-law disabilities of bastards still obtain in the United States, except so far as they are expressly removed by statutory provision.⁶ Where, therefore, a statute makes use of the word "children," it must of necessity be construed to mean such as the law recognizes as children; its meaning cannot be so extended as to include illegitimate children, except so far as they are recognized by other provisions of the statute.⁷ And it is so where a statute employs the word "kindred" or the phrase "next of kin,"⁸ or the word "descendants."⁹

2. By Civil Law.—The civil law differed from the common law with regard to the status of bastards and allowed a bastard to succeed to an inheritance, if after its birth the mother was married to the father; and also if the father had no lawful wife or child, then, even if the concubine was never married to the father, yet she and her bastard son were admitted each to one-twelfth of the inheritance; and a bastard was likewise capable of succeeding to the whole of his mother's estate, although she was never married.¹⁰

3. By Statute—a. IN GENERAL.—But this matter is now, throughout the 169, and Springer v. Fortune, 2 Handy (Ohio) 52.

1. This rule was at an early day incorporated in the statutes of Virginia. See statute of Jan. 1, 1787, limiting the case to the children of a decedent. Blunt v. Gee, 5 Call (Va.) 481. Since 1840, this policy has been extended to all persons. See 2 Min. Inst. 455.

2. So in North Carolina under Battle's Rev., c. 36, § 7.

And in Tennessee under Act 1842, p. 193, § 2. See Grimes v. Orrand, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 298, and Melton v. Davidson, 86 Tenn. 129, both overruling Baker v. Heiskell, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 642. See supra, this title, VI. 2. f. Posthumous Children.

3. Posthumous Child.—The rule established by the cases which reject the doctrine of shifting inheritance is simply that when descent is cast, and the estate vested in him who is heir at the death of the ancestor, the estate cannot be devested by the subsequent birth of nearer heirs. This, obviously, does not interfere with the rule that a child en ventre sa mere is considered in esse for the purpose of inheriting. See Cox v. Matthews, 17 Ind. 367. It has been said that "the example suggested by Blackstone, of the divestiture of the estate of a collateral by the birth of a posthumous child is hardly a case of a shifting inheritance in the strict sense; since at the time of the father's death the infant en ventre was in esse and had the [inchoate] right of inheritance, * * * and it is questionable how far, in such case where the doctrine of shifting inheritance is acknowledged, the first heir would be permitted to deal with the inheritance as his own." 3 L. C. Am. L. R. P. 461. See supra, this title, Posthumous Children.

In Connecticut, however, the term "children" as used in a statute by which the property of an intestate was made to descend "to and among the children, and such as legally represent them" has been held to include illegitimate children. Heath v. White, 5 Conn. 228.

United States, largely regulated by statute.¹ While the statutes of the different states show a considerable variance in their provisions, they are all in the line of a more liberal and generous public policy than that of the common law, and to some extent adopt the rules of the Roman law.

b. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.—And it has, under the statutes of the different states, frequently been contended that, since these statutes were borrowed from the civil law, they should be so construed as to place the bastard in the position which he occupied in that system. But this view has been generally rejected;² the courts have frequently said that legislation giving to illegitimate children the right of succession is undoubtedly in derogation of the common law, and should be strictly construed.³ But it has been held that a statute endowing bastards with heritable blood applied to even such as were the offspring of an incestuous connection.⁴ And it has been held that a statute of legitimation enabling the legitimated to "inherit," by necessary implication gave them the right to take as distributees.⁵

c. SUCCESSION TO ESTATE OF MOTHER.—While an illegitimate child does not inherit from the mother by the common law,⁶ the statutes of probably all the United States now recognize the right of a bastard to succeed to the estate of his mother; in most of these states he inherits the mother's estate with the legitimate children share and share alike, though in a few he is constituted the heir of his mother only in default of lawful issue.⁷ Where a statute gives an illegitimate child the capacity to take from the mother, the bastard will take equally with legitimate children; his right to inherit from the mother is not restricted to cases where no lawful children exist,⁸ except where the bastard is, by the terms of the statute, made the heir and distributee of his mother only if she has no legitimate child.⁹

d. SUCCESSION TO ESTATE OF MOTHER'S ANCESTORS AND COLLATERAL KINDRED.—The right of succession given by a statute which makes a bastard the heir of his mother is usually confined to the mother and her illegitimate children. Thus, a bastard ordinarily cannot take by descent, or share in the distribution of, the estate of his mother's ancestors or collateral relations.¹⁰ Even under statutes which provide that illegitimate children may take or transmit an inheritance "on the part of the mother" in like manner as if they had been lawfully begotten of such mother, or like manner as if they had been born in lawful wedlock, the words "on the part of the mother" seem to have been regarded as no more than "from the mother," and it has been held that a bastard cannot inherit from the mother's collateral kindred,¹¹ nor even from

By the Massachusetts statute of 1851, it was provided that every illegitimate child should be considered as heir of his mother and of any maternal ancestor, and that his issue might take by descent from such ancestor. Still, it was held that a bastard could not take from his mother's collateral kindred. Pratt v. Atwood, 108 Mass. 40. So, it was held that a her ancestors or descendants.¹ There is at least one decision to the effect that the object of the legislature seems to have been to remove the common-law impediment to the descent of the mother's property and of the property of her ancestors, either to her own illegitimate children or their legitimate offspring, and to give them capacity to inherit in the ascending line and through their mother.² And there are a number of dicta to the same effect.³ And, in a number of the United States, the statutes put illegimates upon the same footing with legitimates and they inherit from the mother's ancestral and collateral relatives.⁴

2. SUCCESSION BETWEEN ILLEGITIMATE BROTHERS AND SISTERS. — By the common law, since bastards can have no heirs except those of their own bodies, illegitimate children of the same mother do not inherit from each other.⁵ And even statutes which give illegitimate children the right to inherit from the mother, and the mother from her illegitimate children, do not necessarily enable the illegitimate children of the same mother to inherit from each other.⁶ It has been held that under a statute making bastards capable of inheriting or transmitting inheritance on the part of the mother, in like manner as if they had been lawfully begotten, illegitimate children of the same mother do not inherit from each other.⁷ But the weight of authority seems to sustain the contrary rule.⁸ The question has been settled in some of the bastard could not claim through his sister any part of her son's estate. Haraden v. Larrabee, 113 Mass. 430. As to the earlier Massachusetts statute of 1828, see 4 Kent's Com. 413, note, and Rev. Stat. Mass., c. 61, § 2, commissioners' note.

Sullivan*, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 207, and held that, under that statute, where a bastard dies intestate, leaving no children or descendants, but leaving his mother living, and two bastard brothers by other fathers, his estate will pass to his mother and bastard brothers. But in such case the brothers will be considered as of the half blood only, and will each inherit only half as much as their mother. See also Hepburn v. Dundas, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 219; Bennett v. Toler, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 588, 78 Am. Dec. 638; Butler v. Elyton Land Co., 84 Ala. 384.

In Rhode Island, it was held in a decision based upon the statutory provision under consideration, that where a bastard dies intestate leaving a bastard sister of the same mother, her estate will pass to that sister. Briggs v. Greene, 10 R. I. 495, citing Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh (Va.) 368, and referring to the earlier of the above cited Vermont cases.

United States by statutes which expressly provide that illegitimate children of the same mother may inherit or share in the distribution of each other's estate,¹ and in one state the statute also applies to the illegitimate children of the father.² Statutes of this nature have been held to embrace the issue of an incestuous connection.³ And under some of the statutes the brothers and sisters of the bastard inherit to the exclusion of the mother,⁴ though, under other statutes, the mother takes half of the estate and the rest goes to the brothers and sisters.⁵

f. SUCCESSION BETWEEN LEGITIMATE AND ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN OF SAME MOTHER.— Since bastards cannot, by the common law, be heirs themselves, or have any heirs but those of their own bodies, legitimate brothers or sisters of a bastard cannot inherit from him,⁶ nor he from them.⁷ A statute which provides that illegitimate children of the same mother may inherit or share in the distribution of each other's estate, does not, it has been held, establish the right of succession between the legitimate and illegitimate children of the same mother.⁸ And it has been held that statutes making bastards capable of inheriting or transmitting inheritance on the part of the mother do not have that effect.⁹ But in some of the states, this right of succession is expressly established as well between illegitimate as legitimate children of the same mother.¹⁰ And where a statute provided, in the case of a bastard dying intestate and without issue, that his brothers and sisters by the same mother should take his estate, it was held that this could not be limited to any particular description of brothers and sisters, but that it referred alike to those lawfully and unlawfully begotten.¹¹ Under a statute providing that legitimate and illegitimate children shall share equally in the mother's estate, and that "should either of such children die intestate, without child, his or her brothers or sisters shall, in like manner, take his or her estate," illegitimate children

Under the Ohio Act of 1853, which provided that "if the mother be dead, the estate of such bastard shall descend to relatives on the part of the mother as if the intestate had been legitimate," it was held that legitimate children succeeded to the estate of their mother's illegitimate child. Lewis v. Eutsler, 4 Ohio St. 355.

11. It was so held under the provision of the Tennessee statute that when a bastard having property dies intestate and without children, "his brothers and sisters shall take his estate." Riley v. Byrd, 3 Head (Tenn.) 20. But it was held in a later case that, while legitimate children could inherit from the illegitimate, the latter could not inherit from the former. Woodward v. Duncan, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 562. To remedy this the Act of 1866-67 was passed. See Tennessee Code (M. & V. 1884), § 3274. Scoggins v. Barnes, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 560.

share the estate of a legitimate child, who dies intestate without child, equally with the legitimate children.¹ It has been held that when an illegitimate child is fully legitimated by a special act, passed at the instance of the putative father, the legitimated child and the children born in wedlock inherit from each other.²

g. SUCCESSION TO ESTATE OF FATHER. — By the common law an illegitimate child could not be the heir of his father.³ But statutes are occasionally met with by which a bastard may inherit from his father, if recognized or acknowledged by him,⁴ though, by some statutes, only when the intestate leaves no legitimate children or other legal heirs resident in the United States.⁵ But the inheritable qualities given a bastard by these statutes are not general; he succeeds to the estate of his father only.⁶ An illegitimate child can, of course, be made capable of inheriting from the father by a special legislative act.⁷ Antenuptial children who become legitimated by the father's and mother's marriage and recognition, are regarded as heirs of the father, and are, it has been held, even entitled to inherit from the father's collateral relatives through him.⁸

h. SUCCESSION TO ESTATE OF FATHER'S KIN. — By the statutes of some of the United States illegitimate children, under certain conditions, inherit even from the lineal and collateral kindred of the father.⁹ But the adoption of a child by the putative father under a statute which provides that after the adoption the child shall be considered legitimate as respects the father, does not render the child capable of inheriting as the representative of the father.¹⁰ And it has been held that a bastard who is made heir-at-law of his father by a special legislative act does not inherit from the father's collateral kindred.¹¹

A statute of Utah providing that illegitimate children shall inherit from the father, whether acknowledged by him or not, if the paternity is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court, has been held to be a valid enactment. Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682.

It was held in *Willoughby v. law a bastard can have no heir save of his own body, and if he dies intestate, without issue, his estate escheats.¹ But the common-law rule has been very generally modified by statute.

By Husband or Wife. — Thus, by statutes very generally enacted throughout the United States, the husband or wife of a bastard dying intestate is allowed to claim inheritance from the deceased.²

By the Mother. — The common-law rule that the estate of an illegitimate child cannot be inherited by the mother³ is not abrogated by a statute which merely enables an illegitimate child to inherit from the mother, and does not provide that the mother shall inherit from her illegitimate child.⁴ Statutes sometimes provide that the illegitimate children may inherit or transmit an inheritance "on the part of the mother" in like manner as if they had been lawfully begotten of such mother, or, in one state, in like manner as if they had been born in lawful wedlock. Courts in their expositions of these expressions have questioned whether they establish the right of a mother to succeed to the estate of her illegitimate child,⁵ but it has been held that she does.⁶ The right of a mother to succeed to the estate of her illegitimate child is now generally recognized by express statutory provisions,⁷ though sometimes only when the bastard does not leave a surviving spouse or issue.⁸

By the Mother's Heirs. — Although it is provided by statute that bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of the mother as if born in lawful wedlock, the collateral heirs of the mother of a bastard do not, it has been held, succeed to his estate.⁹ And it has been held that a statute which simply constitutes the mother heir to an illegitimate child who dies intestate, unmarried, and without issue, does not enable the heirs of the mother, she being dead, to inherit from the bastard.¹⁰ Nor does a statute which makes bastards capable of inheriting from and through the mother, make the brothers and sisters of the mother capable of inheriting from her illegitimate children.¹ But, by some statutes, the estate of an illegitimate child who dies intestate, unmarried, and without issue, goes to the mother's heirs at law, in case she dies before the bastard.²

By the Father. — The bastard's father is usually excluded from the succession,³ though in one of the United States the father succeeds to the estate of a natural child whom he has acknowledged.⁴ But it seems doubtful whether a father who procures the enactment of a special legislative act legitimizing his bastard child can inherit from the child.⁵

j. SUCCESSION TO ESTATE OF BASTARD'S CHILDREN. — In construing a statute providing for the inheritance of the estate of an illegitimate child by the mother and her representatives, it was held that the statute had no application to determine the course of succession to the estate of a legitimate descendant of a bastard who died before the intestate.⁶

k. SUCCESSION BY DECEASED BASTARD'S CHILDREN. — According to the construction placed upon some of the statutes which confer inheritable qualities upon illegitimate children, the lawful issue of a deceased illegitimate parent does not inherit the estate of a paternal or maternal ancestor of the parent to which the bastard would have been entitled if living.⁷ But the statutes of some of the United States are given a different construction, and the children of a deceased illegitimate child succeed to any estate which the illegitimate would have inherited if alive.⁸ A view seems to have been taken with regard to the effect of certain of these statutes (provisions declaring that bastards by the same mother shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of each other) in accordance with which they have the effect not only of establishing the right of succession between bastard brothers and sisters as if they were legitimate,⁹ but also between their legitimate descendants; at least, it has been held that the legitimate children of a bastard inherit from the bastard brother of their parent who dies after the death of such parent.¹⁰

X. SUCCESSION BY AND FROM ADOPTED CHILDREN — 1. Origin of Adoption Statutes. — Though the adoption of children is unknown to the common law,¹¹ the civil law recognized the practice.¹² And it has, to a large extent, been thence adopted into the law of the United States. is that the adopted child becomes entitled to succeed to the estate of the adopting parent in the same manner as if it had been a child of the blood of such parent.¹ And it has been held that if an adopted child dies before its adopting parents, its children will take by right of representation in the same manner as if it had been a natural child.² But the adoption statutes which confer upon adopted children the right of inheritance, give them merely the rights possessed by natural born children in case of intestacy, and, in the absence of a valid contract to the contrary, do not restrict the adopting parent's right to alienate his property.³

(2) Succession Limited to Estate of Adopting Parent. — But the adopted child becomes heir to the adopting parent only; if the law permits adoption by the husband without the assent of his wife, the child so adopted becomes the heir of the husband alone, and sustains no relation to, and is not heir of, the wife.⁴ And, indeed, the general effect of the decisions is to deny the right of the adopted child to succeed to the estate of any member of the adopting family other than the adopting parents. So, it has been held that an adopted child does not succeed to the estate of the adopting parents' ancestors,⁵ or collateral kin,⁶ nor to the estate of children born to the adopting parents.⁷ But, under a statute providing that "if a man marry a second

But the Texas Revised Statutes provide, in effect, that the adopted child shall inherit only one-fourth of the adopting parent's estate, if there are natural children. See Eckford v. Knox, 67 Tex. 200.

An Indiana statute provided that if an intestate who had married twice had no children by his second wife, but left children by his first wife, such children would inherit his realty subject to a life estate in the widow. It was held that a child adopted by a decedent and his first wife was within this statute and took the realty subject to a life estate of the second wife. Markover v. Krauss, 132 Ind. 294.

So in Massachusetts, where it was provided that an adopted child should inherit from his adopting parents as if born to such parents in lawful wedlock, it was held that an adopted child was "issue" within the meaning of a statute providing that when a husband dies intestate and "leaves no issue living," his widow shall receive a certain portion of his land. Buckley v. Frasier, 153 Mass. 525. See the title ISSUE (DESCENDANTS), vol. 17, p. 544, note 6.

But in Mississippi and Nebraska the statutes regulating the adoption of children departed materially from the typical adoption statutes, and the adopted child does not succeed to the property of the adopting parents, unless the benefit of heirship is conferred by the proceedings for adoption. Beaver v. Crump, 76 Miss. 34; Ferguson v. Herr, 64 Neb. 649. See Martin v. Long, 53 Neb. 694.

And in an early case arising in the District of Columbia it was held that an adopted child could not inherit property from the adopting parents, except by will. Moore v. Hoffman, 2 Hayw. & H. (D. C.) 173, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,764a.

or subsequent wife, and has by her no children, but has children alive by a previous wife, the land which, at his death, descends to such wife, shall, at her death, descend to his children," it has been held that a child adopted during the former marriage inherits the same as the natural children.¹ However, a child adopted during the time intervening between two marriages does not inherit from the second wife as a child of her husband by a previous wife.²

(3) Succession to Estate of Natural Parents. — It has been held that though the child acquires certain additional rights because of the adoption, there is nothing in the act of adoption which takes away other existing rights, and, on becoming entitled to inherit from its adopting parents, the adopted child does not thereby lose its right to inherit from its natural parents.³ But it has been held that a grandchild who is adopted by his grandfather cannot succeed to his property as his son and also as his grandson, even though it is provided by statute that "no person shall, by being adopted, lose his right to inherit from his natural parents or kindred."⁴

(4) Succession to Estate of First of Two Adopting Parents. — As a child may succeed to the estate of both its natural and adopting parents, so a child which has been adopted more than once may, it has been held, inherit from each of its adopting parents.⁵

b. SUCCESSION FROM ADOPTED CHILD — Lineal Descent. — Naturally the lineal descendants of an adopted child succeed to his property even though it was inherited from his adopting parents; for they, like the adopted child, must be regarded as of the stock of the adopting parents.⁶

Succession by Ascendants and Collaterals. — But there is considerable conflict of authority as to the course of succession when the adopted child leaves no descendants. Some authorities have laid down the broad general rule that the adopting parents are not entitled to succeed to the estate of the adopted child, but that, upon the death of an adopted child, unmarried and without descendants, its estate, in the absence of statutes to the contrary, vests in its natural parents to the exclusion of its adopting parents.⁷ Other authorities go no farther than to hold that the natural parents and kindred of an adopted child succeed to property which was not derived from the adopting parents,⁸ or which was derived from the natural parents.⁹ It has been held that the natural parents and kindred of an adopted child succeed to his estate, even though it was derived from the adopting parents.¹⁰ But the Indiana courts, at least, have rejected this view, and hold that when a child, who has been adopted by a husband and wife jointly, dies intestate, leaving neither wife nor descendants surviving him, property derived by the child from one of the adopting parents goes to the other adopting parent, if living,¹¹ or, if dead, to the heirs of the adopting father or mother,¹² to the exclusion of the natural parents or their heirs. And it has sometimes been declared by statute that, on the decease of the person adopting a child, and the subsequent decease of the child, without issue, the property of the adopting parent shall descend to his or her next of kin, and not to the next of kin of the adopted child.¹

XI. PROOF OF HEIRSHIP.—In order to establish the right of heirship it is first necessary to show that the ancestor is dead.² But, since testacy is the affirmative and intestacy the negative of a fact, it will, upon proof of the ancestor's death, be presumed that he died intestate, and that the title to his land has passed to his heirs by descent, in the absence of proof to the contrary.³ It is necessary for one claiming as heir not only to show his relationship with the deceased,⁴ but also that no other relatives exist to impede the descent to him, i. e. the exhaustion of any line entitled to claim before him.⁵ It has been said that unreasonable delay in asserting a claim to an intestate's estate serves to cast a cloud upon the right of the claimant.⁶

1. See Spangenberg v. Guiney, 3 Ohio Dec. 163, 2 Ohio N. P. 39, wherein it was held that the statute determined the course of succession to such property only as the adopted child owned at the time of his death, and had no application to property which he might have conveyed away.

Bastard as Heir—Proof Must Conform to Statutory Requirements.—It was held that where the statute enabled an illegitimate child to inherit in cases where the father dies intestate without heirs in the United States, such child claiming title to real estate of his father must prove that he died intestate without heirs resident in the United States. Cox v. Rash, 82 Ind. 519.

Statement in Agreed Case Held Evidence.—A statement that the lineal and collateral relatives of the deceased are extinct "so far as the parties hereto know" in a case stated by agreement to be considered in effect as a special verdict, was held sufficient proof that there were no heirs. Dowell v. Thomas, 13 Pa. St. 41.

But where the death of one entitled to a prior right only is proved in such a case without some negative proof of the existence of issue, it is not sufficient; the plaintiff being bound to remove every possibility of title in another before he can recover against the person in possession. *Richards v. I. DEFINITION AND HISTORY — Definition. — A succession tax may be defined as a governmental impost, duty, or excise upon the privilege secured by law to devisees, legatees, grantees, heirs, and personal representatives, of taking, holding, and enjoying all property, real and personal, or any interest therein, passing by will, by intestate law, or by any grant or gift made inter vivos and intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor.¹ The succession tax is also variously called a succession duty, a legacy tax, a collateral inheritance tax, and a transfer tax.

History. — Succession duties or taxes have been in existence for centuries. They were well known in Roman jurisprudence, and were imposed upon all successions except those to the nearest relatives and to the poor. The practice has long been resorted to in European countries. It was introduced in England in 1780, and has been much enlarged from time to time. In the United States, an inheritance tax was first adopted in Pennsylvania in 1826, since which date similar statutes have been enacted by many of the states, and also by the federal government as a means of war revenue.² Such taxes have been approved generally by writers upon political economy and systems of taxation,³ and it has been said that no tax can be less burdensome and interfere less with the productive and industrial agencies of society.⁴

II. NATURE AND CONSTITUTIONALITY. — The theory on which taxation on the devolution of estates at the death of their owners is based and its validity upheld is clearly established. This theory is founded on two principles: first, an inheritance tax is not one on property, but one on the right of succession thereto;⁵ and second, the right to take property by devise or descent is the

and exemption from taxation is claimed on the ground that the legislature has not provided proper machinery for accomplishing the legislative purpose in the particular instance, a liberal rather than a strict construction should be applied, and if by fair and reasonable construction of its provisions the purpose of the statute can be carried out, that interpretation ought to be given to effectuate the legislative intent.¹

Where Decedent Died on Day Act Took Effect. — Matter of Dreyfous, (Surrogate Ct.) 28 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 27.

Death Between Passage and Taking Effect. — The Act of 1885 must be construed to mean that the estate of one dying after the passage of the act was taxable although such death oc-provides.¹ But the method of procedure for the ascertainment and determination of the liability of a succession to pay the tax is controlled by the statute on the subject in force at the time of the institution of the proceeding.²

Effect of Foreign Treaties. — Succession-tax laws in conflict with any treaty between the United States and a foreign nation are to that extent void.³

IV. SUCCESSIONS TAXABLE—1. In General. — The intent of the statutes is to impose a tax on the succession to each and every interest derived from a testator or intestate,⁴ within certain limits and under certain circumstances hereinafter noted.

Bequest in Satisfaction of Debt. — Where a legacy is given in payment of a debt which is of legal obligation in the lifetime of the testator and at the time of his death, and the legacy does not exceed the amount due, such legacy, if accepted in full satisfaction, is regarded as a payment and not as a mere bounty, and is not subject to the succession tax.⁵ But this principle cannot curd before the act actually took effect, the opening clause of the first section being "after the passing of this act." Matter of Chardavoyne, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 466. But see Matter of Howe, 112 N. Y. 100.

Trust Deed to Be Executed According to Will. — Where a testator makes his will and then deeds his property in trust for his own benefit during his life, the same to pass upon his death according to the terms of the will, the interest of the legatees vests only at the time of the testator's death and not at the date of the deed of trust, and the statute in force at the former date controls the imposition of the tax. In re Johnson, (Surrogate Ct.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 963.

New York. — The amending Act of 1889 extends the exemption of adopted children, or those sustaining the relation of child to parent, to all estates of deceased persons where no assessment of taxes had been made at the time of the passage of such amendment. Matter of Thomas, (Surrogate Ct.) 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 388. But the Act of 1889 could have no effect where a final order assessing the tax had been made before its passage. Matter of Kemeys, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 117. Compare Ryan's Estate, (Surrogate Ct.) 18 N. Y. St. Rep. 992. The Act of 1892 imposes a tax upon successions to property transferred by will before the passage of the act whenever any beneficial interest therein vests subsequently to its passage. Talmadge v. Seaman, 85 Hun (N. Y.) 242. The Act of 1897 imposes a tax upon the execution of a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property made before or after the passage of such amendment. Matter of Delano, 176 N. Y. 486; Matter of Vanderbilt, 50 N. Y. Legacy Not Taking Effect. — A legacy given by will to a corporation which the testator desires to be created cannot be taxed, as such legacy cannot pass. Matter of Chesebrough, (Surrogate Ct.) 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 365.

The Federal Act of 1898 does not make the duty payable when the person possessed of such property died testate, if it would not be payable if such person died intestate; and where if the deceased died intestate the heirs would not take under the intestate laws of any state or territory, their rights are the same under a will and the tax is not payable. Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578; Moore v. Ruckgaber, 184 U. S. 593.

apply where no claim such as could have been enforced by suit exists,¹ as where the legacy is a pure gratuity based on a faithful performance of services rendered without expectation of reward and without liability on the part of the person receiving them.² So an obligation created by the will of a testator where none existed before, such as a legacy to a church in consideration that it shall keep in order the graves of the testator and his family,³ or that it shall cause the church bell to be rung at specified times,⁴ does not exempt the legacy given to discharge the same from the payment of the tax. In England, bequests to executors or testamentary trustees in compensation for their services under the will of the testator are subject to the legacy duty.⁵ In the United States, however, commissions are allowed to personal representatives by statute, and a legacy in lieu thereof is not taxable.⁶

2. Nature of Property Transferred. — The right to impose the tax does not depend on the nature or kind of property transferred.⁷ But in the case of a transfer by will or by the intestate laws, the property contemplated by the statute is only that of which the decedent was actually seized or possessed at the time of his death,⁸ and does not include the increase or income thereafter

Contra under New York Act. — The word "transfer" in the Act of 1892 is used in its ordinary legal signification, which is that the owner of a thing delivers it to another person with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter. It matters not what the motive of a transfer by will may be, whether to pay a debt, discharge some moral obligation, or to benefit a relative for whom the testator entertains a strong affection; if the devise or bequest be accepted by the beneficiary, the transfer is made by will, and the state by the statute in question makes a tax to impinge upon that performance. Matter of Gould, 156 N. Y. 423, modifying 19 N. Y. App. Div. 352. As to the rule under the earlier New York statute, see the New York cases cited supra, this note.

Exempt Property — Government Bonds. — The tax, not being upon the property, may be imposed upon the succession to property otherwise exempt from taxation, such as United States securities,² the certificate of a state loan,³ or trust funds invested in incorporated companies liable to taxation under their own capital.⁴

3. Nature of Transfer. — A transfer need not be effected by will or by the intestate laws in order to be subject to the tax. The right of the state to a tax is not defeated by the conveyance or transfer of the title to the property during the lifetime of the owner, nor by possession taken under such conveyance, if the transfer is by gift causa mortis,⁵ or if the enjoyment of the property conveyed is not intended to take effect until the death of the grantor.⁶

The Words "in Contemplation of Death" do not refer to the general expectation which every mortal entertains, but rather the apprehension which arises from some existing condition of body or some impending peril. Matter of Baker, 83 N. Y. App. Div. 530.

Gift Without Valuable Consideration. — Under Act Cong. June 30, 1864, § 132, which imposes a tax upon any "deed of gift or other assurance of title made without valuable or adequate consideration," where the testator provides in his will that advances which shall be made by him shall be charged as such, and subsequently he gives land to his son in execution of his intention to make an advance, the tax is leviable. U. S. v. Banks, 17 Fed. Rep. 322. The tax cannot be defeated by the recital of a nominal consideration which would be deemed valuable only in the technical sense of that term, because the statute says the consideration must not only be valuable but adequate. Power of Appointment. — The transfer of property by virtue of a power of appointment contained in a will or deed is taxable, but in the absence of legislative provision otherwise, if the beneficiaries would have been exempt if the transmission had been directly to them without the interposition of a power, they are exempt as appointees.¹

4. Nature of Estate Created. — The right of the state to tax successions does not depend upon the nature of the estate which the transferee receives. Estates in possession or expectancy, gifts of the corpus or of the income, and estates in trust are alike embraced within the language of the statutes.²

5. Amount of Estate Transferred. — Where a statute imposes the tax upon the transfer of property in excess of a certain amount, the aggregate amount passing to persons not specifically exempted determines the imposition of the tax, and not the specific share passing to the individual.³ And the statute should not be construed as exempting a certain fixed amount out of all tax-

The Federal Act of 1898 imposing a progressive tax on legacies above $10,000 in value is to be construed as imposing the tax on the particular legacies and not on the whole personal estate, and therefore the progressive rate depends upon the amount of each individual legacy and not upon the amount of the whole estate devised. Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41.

A Legacy of an Even Five Hundred Dollars payable at the end of one year does not bear able estates, but merely as exempting estates of a less amount in total value from any tax whatever.¹

6. Situs of Property Transferred — a. REAL PROPERTY. — The uniform rule is, that a tax can be assessed upon the succession to real estate only when such realty is situate within the borders of the taxing state.² And if the property be so situated, it is immaterial whether the person dying seized or possessed thereof,³ or the person to whom it is transferred,⁴ be a resident or nonresident of the state. If the realty be situate without the state, the conversion of the same into personalty after the death of the decedent will not alter the rule.⁵

b. PERSONAL PROPERTY. — In England the situs of personal property has been deemed immaterial, the question of liability being determined by the regulation of the succession. If the English law governed the succession, duty was payable; where the succession was not governed by that law, then no duty was payable, even though the property was situate in England.⁶

interest until after one year from the death of the testator, and therefore is not subject to the tax, as its fair market value is not equal to five hundred dollars. Peck's Estate, (Surrogate Ct.) 24 Abb. In Pennsylvania the rule is somewhat modified. Where, however, the conversion is not imperative, but only permissive, and rests in the discretion of the executors or others, it does not become operative until the exercise of the discretion, and in the meantime the land retains its normal character. Drayton's Appeal, 61 Pa. St. 172; Miller v. Com., 111 Pa. St. 321.

In the United States this rule seems to have been followed only by the federal courts in construing the war revenue acts of 1864 and 1898.¹ In the state courts, the doctrine is adhered to that the situs of personal property, as well as of real property, governs the liability to tax of the succession thereto.² But the decisions are by no means harmonious as to the principles by which the situs of personalty is to be determined. In the case of a resident decedent leaving personal property without the state, it is agreed that such property follows the domicile of the owner and that the succession to the same is taxable in the latter state.³ In the case, however, of a nonresident decedent leaving personal property within the state, the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam does not prevail, and the situs of the personalty depends upon whether, from its nature, the property can be said to be actually "within" the state.⁴

Under the New York Act of 1885 property of a nonresident decedent left in this state at his death was not taxable. Matter of Enston, 113 N. Y. 174, reversing 46 Hun (N. Y.) 506, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 93; In re Hall, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 8 N. Y. Supp. 556, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 609. Compare Matter of Tulane, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 213. The Act of 1887 was intended to subject the succession to the personal property of a nonresident decedent to taxation. But such latter act did not operate to confer jurisdiction on the surrogate's court to proceed to tax such property. Its jurisdiction was limited to cases in which a nonresident decedent left real estate within the county. Thus the effect was that no tax could be imposed, as there was no method for assessing and collecting the same. As to personal property within this state belonging to nonresident decedents, the succession is under the law of a foreign state and that succession cannot be taxed by this state. In such case the right of the state to impose a tax is based on its dominion over the property situate within its territory. The Act of 1896 confers jurisdiction on the surrogate's court over property of nonresident decedents within its territory, and in a case where the property of a nonresident was taken from the state before the enactment of the Act of 1896, there was no authority to impose the tax. Matter of Embury, 19 N. Y. App. Div. 214, affirmed 154 N. Y. 746. See also Matter of Pettit, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 30, affirmed 171 N. Y. 654.

North Carolina. — State v. Brevard, Phil. Eq. (62 N. Car.) 141.

In Pennsylvania a distinction has been made

Debts. — Thus, the situs of a debt being the domicile of the creditor, debts due to a nonresident decedent from resident debtors cannot be said to be within the state,¹ while debts due to a resident decedent from a nonresident debtor are regarded as so situated.² And the rule in either case is not affected by the fact that the debts are secured by mortgages upon realty.³

Deposits. — A deposit, though strictly a debt, is nevertheless considered to be a tangible chattel for the purpose of imposing a succession tax, and its situs is regarded as being the place where it is actually found, irrespective of the domicile of the depositor.⁴

Corporate Stock. — In legal contemplation, the property of the shareholder, as represented by certificates of stock, is where the corporation exists, and therefore the capital stock of a domestic corporation is considered as having a situs within the home state, even though the owner be a nonresident and the stock be in his possession without the state at the time of his death.⁵ As to stock of foreign corporations, however, its physical presence within a state apparently gives it a situs there for the purpose of this tax.⁶

Corporate Bonds. — The situs of bonds, either of domestic or foreign corporations, is the place where they are physically located at the time of the owner's death.⁷

between tangible and intangible property, and the general rule is that intangible personal property of a nonresident, such as bonds, mortgages, and other choses in action, is governed as to its situs by the domicile of the owner, and hence such property is not subject to collateral inheritance tax because it is not situate within the state. Small's Estate, 151 Pa. St. 1, affirming 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 1; Orcutt's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 179; Del Busto's Estate, 23 W. N. C. (Pa.) 111. But if such property is in the state not merely for temporary safekeeping, but is in the hands of agents for the purpose of transacting business with it to the extent of investment and reinvestment, and it has never actually been out of the commonwealth, this is sufficient to give the property an actual situs independent of and contrary to its constructive and fictional situs at the domicile of the owner. Lewis's Estate, 203 Pa. St. 211. See also Weaver's Estate, 4 Pa. Dist. 260; Stanton's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. 371.

In Quebec the doctrine prevails that property of a movable nature accompanies the person of the owner, and property consisting of bank shares and money loaned, though actually within the province at the time of the death of the nonresident owner, is not chargeable with duty. Lambe v. Manual, 18 Quebec Super. Ct. 184.

In British Columbia property must be actually situated within the province. A situs existing merely by legal fiction is not contemplated by the statute. Re Templeton, 6 British Columbia, 180.

7. Exempt Successions — a. RELATIVES AND CONNECTIONS. — The statutes generally exempt from the tax the transfer of personal property under a certain amount in value and of real property of any value when made to the father, mother, husband, wife, child, brother, sister, wife or widow of a son or the husband of a daughter, adopted or acknowledged child, or lineal descendant of the decedent or grantor.¹

Wife. — The transfer to a wife of a certain sum in satisfaction of her right of dower is not taxable, whether such transfer be made by virtue of a bequest in lieu of dower² or in settlement of the wife's claims in opposition to the will.³ Where a wife is given an estate upon the express condition that she pay therefrom certain legacies, such legacies are in fact direct and are subject to the tax.⁴

Widow of Son. — Under a statute exempting legacies to the widow of the son, a legatee who once stood in that relation to the testator, but who remarried before receiving the legacy, is no longer within the description and is subject to the tax.⁵

Husband of Daughter. — Under the exemption of the husband of a daughter from the tax, it is immaterial that the daughter died before her parent,⁶ or that the husband has remarried.⁷

Lineal Descendants. — The words "lineal descendants" are restricted to the descendants of the decedent or grantor, and do not include the descendants of brothers and sisters or other persons exempted from the tax.⁸

The Ohio Statute exempts nieces and nephews of the decedent, but such exemption does not extend beyond the children of the testator's brothers and sisters, and therefore does not include nieces of the consort or grandnieces. Bates's Estate, 5 Ohio Dec. 547.

Trust in Favor of Exempt Person. — Where a bequest was made to an executor individually on his promise to hold the same for the testatrix's brother, the trust being an enforceable one will be recognized as for the said brother, and the partial exemption allowed him under the New York laws will be allowed. Matter of Farley, (Surrogate Ct.) 15 N. Appointment of Lineal Descendants. — Where a testator devises his estate in trust to his daughter with a power of appointment to her by will of those who shall receive the same after her death, and she appoints lineal descendants of her father, such descendants are considered to take under the first will, and being lineal descendants are not subject to the tax. Com. v. Williams, 13 Pa. St. 29.

Appropriation of Resident Property to Lineals. — Where a testator dies in a foreign country leaving property within New York, the executors may appropriate that property situated abroad to the payment of legacies to collaterals, and may leave the property situated in the Adopted Child. — The word "children" in a statute does not include adopted children, and devises to the latter are not exempt unless the statute expressly so enacts.¹ Nor does a special act conferring upon an adopted child the right of inheritance release his estate from the tax.² Where adopted children are expressly embraced within the exempt class, it is sufficient if the proceedings for adoption have been taken under the laws of any state.³ Children of an adopted child are not included within the exemption.⁴

"Acknowledged" Child. — The New York statute exempts from the tax any person to whom the decedent or grantor, for not less than ten years prior to the transfer, stood in the mutually acknowledged relation of a parent. The phrase "mutually acknowledged relation" is not limited to a person formally adopted by the decedent,⁵ or to illegitimate children,⁶ nor was it considered necessary, under early statutes, that the relationship should originate during the minority of the child.⁷ Whether the relation has actually existed is a question of evidence, depending upon the particular circumstances of each case.⁸

Illegitimate Child. — A bequest to an illegitimate child is subject to the tax,⁹ and a statute of legitimation will not exempt the one legitimated unless such purpose is expressed openly and clearly therein.¹⁰ But the tax cannot be collected upon the estate passing to children legitimated by marriage between their parents followed by cohabitation.¹¹

b. CORPORATIONS. — Express exemptions are found in the statutes of some jurisdictions in favor of religious, charitable, or educational institutions,¹² enjoyment, whether absolute or for a term of years, the tax accrues immediately upon the death of the testator or intestate.¹ And after an estate has once vested and the commonwealth becomes entitled to the tax, payment thereof cannot be evaded by a release or conveyance of the property to one whose right of succession is not taxable.²

2. Future Estates.—The authorities are not unanimous as to the time of accrual of the tax upon remainders. In the absence of any express statutory direction, the better rule would seem to be that the tax is due when the property bequeathed or devised actually vests.³ Thus, a vested remainder given by a will is taxable at the time of the testator's death,⁴ but a contingent remainder does not become taxable until it vests in right by the happening of the contingency.⁵

3. New York.—Prior to 1899 it was repeatedly held that future contingent estates were not taxable until they vested in possession and the beneficial owner could be ascertained. The Act of 1899 changed the law upon the subject and made the tax payable forthwith "out of the property transferred." So that whoever may ultimately take the property takes that which remains after the payment of the tax. This amendment makes provision for property transferred in trust and contemplates defeasible transfers as well as absolute transfers. Each trust estate created is to be separately appraised and the tax determined according to the percentage fixed by the statute for those who are contingently entitled to the estate; and when fixed the tax is forthwith payable out of the trust estate. Matter of Vanderbilt, 172 N. Life Estates and Remainders. — The tax on a life estate should be taken out of the income.¹ Whether the tax upon a remainder should be deducted from the principal sum,² or borne by the beneficiary personally,³ depends largely upon the language of the taxing statutes.

2. Transfers of Realty. — The devisee only, and not the executor, is liable for the tax on real estate passing directly to the former.⁴

Lien of Tax. — By most of the statutes, the tax is made a lien upon the realty until paid,⁵ or until discharged by the running of a statutory period of limitation.⁶ The lien is not such as to take precedence over a prior mortgage,⁷ but will effectually break a covenant against incumbrances.⁸

VII APPRAISAL AND ASSESSMENT — 1. Appraisal — a. APPOINTMENT OF APPRAISER. — Proceedings to determine the liability of an estate to succession duty are usually instituted by the appointment of an appraiser, whose duty it is to ascertain the value of the estate in question. Such appointment may be made either upon the application of an interested party, or by the surrogate who first acquires jurisdiction by the issuing of letters,⁹ upon his own motion.¹⁰ An appraiser should be appointed as soon after the death of

The Object of the Appraisement, as well as the duty of the appraiser, is not to determine whether the estate is subject to the tax, but simply to ascertain the value of the estate. Stinger v. Com., 26 Pa. St. 422.

New York — Who May Be Appointed Appraiser. Since the passage of the Act of 1900 the surro-the decedent as is practicable,¹ but the time when the surrogate shall proceed must be left to his sound judgment.² He is not bound to wait for a final accounting³ nor until it shall be ascertained whether there are claims against the estate.⁴ The power of the surrogate to appoint an appraiser does not depend upon proof being furnished to him of the condition and situation of the decedent's property at the time of his death. He may exercise the power upon the filing of a petition based upon information and belief.⁵

b. NOTICE OF APPRAISAL.—The appraiser must give notice by mail of the time of appraisement to all persons interested in the estate.⁶

c. ASCERTAINING VALUE OF ESTATE—(1) Value of Estate at Time of Death.—For the purpose of assessing a succession tax, the value of the estate at the time of the transfer of title is to be determined, and not its value at the time of transfer of possession.⁷ The possible appreciation or depreciation of such property after the death of the decedent is not to be considered.⁸

Future Estates.—Whenever a future or contingent interest is appraised, whether at the time the contingency occurs, or immediately upon the decedent's death, its value is to be fixed as of the latter date.⁹

(2) Form of Estate at Time of Death.—It is equally true that the appraiser must determine the value of the property transferred in the form in which it stood at the time of the decedent's death.¹⁰ Thus, mortgage debts should not be deducted by the appraiser from the amount of the personal property, even where a testator has directed such debts to be so paid, as the real estate is the primary fund out of which the mortgages are to be satisfied.¹¹ And so the doctrine of equitable conversion is inapplicable, and if the testator

The Tax Is Not Computed on the Aggregate Value of the whole estate of the decedent considered as the unit for taxation, but on the value of the separate interests into which it is divided by the will or by the statute laws of this state, and as a charge against each share or interest according to its value, and against the person entitled thereto. Matter of Westurn, 152 N. The Value of a Life Interest Subject to Annuities is ascertained by finding the present value of the life estate in the entire fund, less the present values of the annuities which are charged upon such fund, instead of deducting from the life estate the actual amount of principal necessary to produce the annuities at the rate of five per cent. per annum. Matter of Maresi, 74 N. burial plot and the improvement and maintenance thereof.¹

Expenses of Administration, consisting of the commissions of executors, administrators, and trustees, are properly deducted.²

Costs of Litigation brought in good faith to construe the will of a testator may be allowed as a deduction,³ as also the expenses incurred by the executor in resisting a contest.⁴ But the sums expended by contesting litigants, even though the litigation be successful, are not properly charged against the estate.⁵

Taxes actually levied and due at the time of the decedent's death should be deducted from the value of the estate.⁶

Disputed Claims against the estate should be temporarily deducted from the total valuation.⁷

Payments in Compromise of litigation instituted by persons claiming adversely to the will form no part of the estate transferred and should be deducted upon appraisal.⁸

d. REPORT OF APPRAISER. — The appraiser must report, for the purpose of taxation, the value of the interests passing under the will, and should state the basis of his opinion as to such value.⁹ Property as to which the appraiser is in doubt should be included in the report as subject to the tax.¹⁰ It is within the discretion of the court to remit the report back to the appraiser before acting upon it for the introduction of additional proof.¹¹

e. REAPPRAISAL. — A reappraisal may be ordered only for the purpose of appraising property omitted from the first appraisement, because of its existence being unknown to the appraiser¹² or because of its value not being then ascertainable.¹³ There is no authority for ordering a reappraisal or a reconsideration of matters already passed upon,¹⁴ such as the actual market value of the assets,¹⁵ or the amount deducted for debts and other expenses.¹ The only remedy in case of an error of law is by appeal from the decree made on the appraisal.²

2. Assessment—a. DETERMINATION OF LIABILITY TO TAX.—The estate having been appraised, it is for the surrogate or probate court to determine as to the liability thereof to the tax,³ and, as necessarily incident to such duty, the court has jurisdiction to determine every question that may arise in the tax proceedings.⁴ The determination of the surrogate is final, unless appealed from.⁵

Notice.—The court must immediately give notice, upon the determination by it as to the liability of an estate to the tax, to all parties known to be interested therein.⁶

b. CORRECTION OF DECREE.—As to purely legal errors, the only remedy by which the determination of the court assessing the tax can be reviewed is by appeal. But the power to modify a decree for any cause extrinsic of the record is an inherent one and may be exercised even after the time to appeal has expired.⁷

c. APPEAL FROM DECREE.—It is usually provided by the statute, that the state, through the proper official,⁸ or any person dissatisfied with the assessment and determination of the tax, may take an appeal therefrom.⁹

VIII. COLLECTION OF TAX. — Provisions are found in the statutes for the institution of proceedings to collect the tax upon the refusal or neglect of the person liable therefor to pay the same.¹ In New York, at least, such remedy would seem to be merely cumulative, as it has been held that the surrogate has power to compel the payment of the tax by such proceedings as are provided generally for the enforcement of the decrees of the surrogate's court, as, for instance, by contempt proceedings.² The time within which the proceeding may or must be commenced is prescribed by the statute,³ and the costs thereof may be taxed against the party liable for the tax.⁴

IX. PENALTY FOR NONPAYMENT. — A common statutory provision is to the effect that unless the tax be paid within a prescribed time, interest shall be charged and collected thereon at a rate in excess of the legal rate, by way of penalty;⁵ except that when, by reason of claims made upon the estate, necessary litigation, or other unavoidable cause of delay, the tax cannot be determined and paid when due, interest at the legal rate shall be charged thereon from the accrual thereof until the cause of delay is removed.⁶ One who claims exemption from the penalty has the burden of showing a sufficient ground for delay in the settlement of the estate,⁷ and neither ignorance of the law nor hardship resulting to the legatee will relieve the estate from the exaction of the extra interest.⁸ The interest should be computed at the rate provided by the law in force at the time of the accrual of the tax,⁹ and should be computed only from such latter date.¹⁰

X. REFUNDING TAX. — Where the statute provides for the refunding of a tax erroneously paid, the prescribed procedure must be strictly followed, and none other can be resorted to.¹

SUCCESSOR. — The term "successor" implies one who takes a place that another has left.²

Ontario. — Where bona fide claims against the estate are discharged by the executors after payment of the tax, a proper pro rata portion thereof will be refunded. Ross v. Reg., 32 Ont. 143.

2. Successively. — In Frisk v. Reigelman, 75 Wis. 499, it was held that proof of the publication of a summons in a daily newspaper "six weeks successively, commencing," etc., does not show compliance with a statute requiring the publication to be made "not less than once a week for six weeks." See also the title TIME, COMPUTATION OF.

Successively and Dissimultaneously. — See Brush Electric Co. v. Western Electric Co., 69 Fed. Rep. 243, affirmed (C. C. A.) 76 Fed. Rep. 761. This was a patent case.

3. Successor. — Davis v. Garr, 6 N. Y. 133. In State v. Andrews, 64 Kan. 496, it was said: "According to all the lexicographers, a successor is merely one who succeeds or takes the place of another."

Public Officer. — The term applies to any future occupant of an office held by a public officer, just as he is the successor of any incumbents who preceded him, no matter when. State v. O'Leary, 64 Minn. 207.

Immediate Successor. — A clause in the constitution of New York provides that the successors of county judges "shall be chosen by the electors of the counties for the term of six years." It was held that the term successors applies to all of the indefinite line following the original incumbents, and furnishes a controlling rule on the subject, except in the special cases where the constitution provides for the filling of vacancies. People v. Townsend, 102 N. Y. 438. See also People v. Carr, 86 N. Y. 514.

In Phillips v. Governor, 2 Ark. 382, it was held that under a statute authorizing administrator's bonds payable to "the governor and his successors in office," the right of action was not restricted to immediate successors of the governor in whose name such bonds might have been taken out.

Heirs — Estate of Inheritance. — In Sedgwick v. Laffin, 10 Allen (Mass.) 430, it was held that a mortgage of land to an individual, his successors and assigns forever, conveyed only a life estate. The court said: "Littleton and Coke declare that the very words 'successors and assigns,' used in the instrument before us, are not sufficient to make an estate of inheritance. Litt., § 1; Co. Litt. 12, 8b."

Limiting Estate. — The granting clause of a deed was as follows: "Do grant, bargain, sell, alien, release, convey, and confirm unto the said parties of the third part and to their successors and assigns." In construing this provision the court said: "There is nothing in any of these words which limits their estate. The authority is to hold to their successors and assigns. There is no particular significance attaching to the word successors in the absence of anything in the other part of the deed showing that a limited estate was granted, and the grant is to the assigns as well as the successors." Kanenbley v. Volkenberg, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 97.

Successor in Interest. — The assignee of a note in action becomes a successor in interest of the assignor or plaintiff. Hallett v. Hallett, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 304. See also Higgins v. New York, 136 N. Y. 214.

Same — Tax Collector. — In Sheehan v. Osborne, (Cal. 1902) 69 Pac. Rep. 843, it was said: "The tax collector is not a corporation sole, whose successors constitute the same fictitious person, and are, therefore, bound by a judgment against a predecessor, but a mere agent of a corporation aggregate—that is, of the county. There is no direct privity, therefore, between a tax collector and his successors in office; nor can the latter be regarded as 'successors in interest' to their predecessors, for neither have any interest in the tax, nor, except as personally affected, in the question of its validity." See also Bailey v. Johnson, 121 Cal. 562.

One Entitled to Succeed. — In construing a statute which provided that certain officers should hold office until their successors were elected or appointed and qualified, the court said: "The word successor is used in our statutes, as in the books, in the twofold sense of the one entitled to succeed and the one who has in fact succeeded. It is here employed in the former acceptation." People v. Ward, 107 Cal. 236.

Railroad Company. — A contract between a municipality and certain railroad companies provided that in a certain event rights granted to the public should revert to such railroad companies and their successors. Upon the happening of the contingency the railroad companies conveyed the reserved strip to an individual. In holding that such individual was

SUCCINCT. — "The word 'succinct' means brief, precise, exact. It is derived from the two Latin words sub, under, below, and cingere, to gird, and literally means girded below, or from below; tucked up; hence, compressed into narrow shape; concise."¹

SUCH. — "Such" in its ordinary sense signifies something previously mentioned or specified; not other or different;² of a like kind; the same not comprehended by the term successors, the court said: "We do not understand that the word successors here refers to grantees, but to such railroad companies as might be successors to the railroad companies who made the contract with the town of Lake; the word successors referring to succession in their capacity as railroads." Huff v. Hastings Express Co., 195 Ill. 257.

Same — Exemption from Taxation. — A statute exempted a railroad and its successors from taxation. In construing this provision in International, etc., R. Co. v. Smith County, 65 Tex. 25, the court said: "The word successors is evidently used to designate such corporations or persons as may, in any lawful manner, acquire the proprietorship of the corporate rights and property through which they are to be exercised, which had the corporation to which the exemption was given."

Successors in Trust. — An assignment for the benefit of creditors purported to convey all the property of the assignor to the assignee "to have and to hold the same unto the said party of the second part, his successors in trust and assigns." In construing this provision the court said: "The use of the words 'successors in trust,' in the granting and habendum clauses of the assignment, is equally unobjectionable. Such phrase referred to such persons as might lawfully succeed the assignee, in case of resignation, removal, or death, but it gave to the assignee no power to select his successor." Langdon v. Thompson, 25 Minn. 509.

Trustees and Successors. — In Davis v. Garr, 6 N. Y. 133, it was held that in an action on a promissory note, where the declaration alleged that such note was payable to three persons as trustees of an unincorporated association or their successors in office, the words "their successors" might be rejected as surplusage.

1. Succinct. — Wolfe v. Wilsey, 2 Ind. App. 558, citing Webat, Dict. The court further said: "If the pleading here contemplated is to derive any character from the word succinct, it can be only that of brevity, compression, terseness."

2. Such Refers to Something Previously Mentioned. — U. S. v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 477; Oquawka v. Graves, (C. C. A.) 82 Fed. Rep. 572; Ventura County v. Clay, 112 Cal. 65; Hunt v. Jordan, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 534; Evans v. State, 150 Ind. 651; Kansas City v. Heacher, 4 Kan. App. 782; Tilson v. State, 29 Kan. 452; Valentine v. Borden, 100 Mass. 280; Willis v. Standard Oil Co., 50 Minn. 290; Vaughn v. Haden, 37 Mo. 179; State v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct., 36 Mont. 396; State v. Brannen, 8 Jones L. (53 N. Car.) 210; Garvin v. State, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 172. See also State v. Beasley, 5 Mo. 92, where the word was rejected as a typographical or clerical inaccuracy.

Refers to Last Antecedent. — In Summerman v. Knowles, 33 N. J. L. 205, it was said: "The word is descriptive, and is a relative word, and as such must be referred to the last antecedent, unless the meaning of the sentence would thereby be impaired." See also Wellman v. Bergmann, 44 N. J. L. 615; Laidley v. Kline, 23 W. Va. 376, wherein the words "such action or scire facias," in a statute, were held to apply to the action or scire facias specified in the provision just preceding.

Same — Such Judge — Two Judges Previously Mentioned. — See In re Remington, 7 Wis. 653.

Such Preceding Noun in Singular Number. — In People v. Union High School Dist., 101 Cal. 658, it was said: "When the word such precedes a noun in the singular number, as in this case — 'such school district' — it partakes of the nature of a pronoun as well as that of an adjective (pronominal adjective), and properly relates to the same noun in the same number as antecedently expressed and qualified, and especially to the antecedent qualification of that noun; and denotes that the noun which it precedes is to be understood as antecedently qualified."

Such Used in Sense of Said. — See Evans v. State, 150 Ind. 651.

Such Not Used in the Sense of Said. — A will gave a homestead to the testator's three daughters for life, "and when said homestead shall be no longer used or occupied as aforesaid by either or any of my beloved daughters above named, then I give and devise the same to such child or children at that time living, and their heirs and assigns forever; and the representative of any deceased child to have the share of his or her parent." It was held that by the expression "child or children," all of the testator's children were referred to, and the word such was not used in the sense of "said," but with reference to the subsequent qualification of survivorship. The provision was meant to give the property to those of his children who should be alive at the termination of the homestead estate, and the issue of those who should then be dead, such issue to take per stirpes. Endicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. Eq. 98.

Such and Some. — A statute provided that upon affidavit that a witness resided out of the territory, a commission might issue to take the testimony of such witness. It was held that an affidavit that "some" of the witnesses of plaintiff resided out of the limits of the territory was not sufficient. Lesne v. Pomphrey, 4 Ala. 79.

As Such. — Where a fiduciary was claimed to hold a fund "as such against the plaintiff," the court said: "The context plainly shows that the words 'as such' refer to him as such administrator of Baker." Gilmore v. Baker, 24 W. Va. 86.

Such Appropriation. — See Collins v. Water Com'rs, 42 U. C. Q. B. 378.

Such Assignee. — A statute providing that the

SUDDENLY. — See note 2.

Circuit Court judge might remove any assignee for cause was amended as follows: "and shall also remove such assignee upon the application of a majority of the creditors of such assignor who shall also represent a majority in value of the debts allowed against said estate." It was held that the word such in the clause "and shall also remove any such assignee" was used in the same sense as the word such in the connection 'creditors of such assignor,' meaning the assignee of a voluntary assignment, spoken of in the previous sections. Burt v. Barnes, 87 Wis. 519. See also Batten v. Smith, 62 Wis. 92.

Such Contracts. — In Floyd v. Harding, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 404, it was said: "Having provided for the recordation of written contracts in the fourth section, the framers of the statute, by the use of the words 'such contracts' in the fifth, evinced a deliberate purpose to confine the operation of that section to contracts in writing." See also Pack v. Hansbarger, 17 W. Va. 341.

Such Insufficiency. — A statute provided that whenever any person liable to the payment of toll should sustain any injury by reason of the turnpike being out of repair, "the corporation owning said road shall be answerable for such injury, and also liable to indictment for such insufficiency and want of repair." In construing this provision the court said: "The word such does not limit the case to the insufficiency and want of repair which has actually occasioned injury to an individual, but to insufficiency and want of repair which renders it dangerous." Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp., 2 Gray (Mass.) 68.

Such Inventory. — A statute after providing that the assignor should file a correct inventory of his assets and a list of his creditors verified by oath and having affixed a certificate of the assignee that the same was correct, etc., proceeded: "And a failure to make and file such inventory and list shall render such assignment void; but no mistake therein shall invalidate such assignment or affect the right of any creditor." It was held that such, qualifying "inventory," referred only to a correct inventory of assets and list of creditors, without any reference whatever to the oath of the assignor or the certificate of the assignee. Steinlien v. Halstad, 52 Wis. 291.

Such Killing. — See Com. v. Johnes, 1 Leigh (Va.) 609; People v. Bealoba, 17 Cal. 397; Bivens v. State, 11 Ark. 455.

Such Marriage — Revocation of Will. — See Ingersoll v. Hopkins, 170 Mass. 404.

Such Petitioners. — Under a statute providing that on the petition of not less than twenty of the freehold owners of lots in any section lying adjacent to a borough, the section on which such petitioners and others resided might be admitted as a part of the borough, it was held that the twenty petitioners for extension must be owners of the lots to be included and residents thereon, the court saying that the word such in the phrase "such petitioners" was intended as demonstrative, pointing directly to the twenty petitioners previously mentioned. Devore's Appeal, 56 Pa. St. 165.

Such Suit. — See Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 76.

Such Ticket. — A statute provided that it should not be lawful for any person within the state to have in possession any ticket of any lottery, not granted or permitted by the state, with intent to sell, negotiate, or dispose of the same, or "to sell, negotiate, or advertise, in any way whatever, any such ticket or part of a ticket." It was held that the word such did not refer to the possession of the seller. The court said: "By the use of the word such it was intended to refer to that which had been previously described — a ticket in a lottery not granted or permitted. That it should be in possession of the seller is no part of the description of the ticket." State v. Scribner, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 251.

Such Time. — A statute provided that a mortgage should be valid from the time it was filed for record until the maturity of the entire debt or obligation, provided such time should not exceed two years. It was held that "the words 'such time,' as used in the proviso, refer to the period between the time of filing the mortgage for record and the maturity of the entire debt, or of all the notes secured by the mortgage." Silvis v. Aultman, 141 Ill. 632.

1. Of That Kind — of Like Kind. — Ventura County v. Clay, 112 Cal. 65; Evans v. State, 150 Ind. 651; Travers v. Wallace, 93 Md. 507; State v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct., 26 Mont. 396; State v. Brannen, 8 Jones L. (53 N. Car.) 210; Garvin v. State, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 172; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Patton, 9 W. Va. 656; Ogden v. Glidden, 9 Wis. 52.

Such Parsonages. — A statute exempted from taxation parsonages, whether of local churches or districts, and whether occupied by the pastor permanently or rented for his benefit, and provided that the leasing of such parsonages should not render them liable to taxation. The court said: "Stress was laid in the argument upon the use of the word such in the last clause of the section — 'the leasing of such parsonages,' etc. It was claimed that the word limited that clause to the same parsonages mentioned in the first clause. The objection to that construction is, as has just been stated, that it renders one or the other of these clauses superfluous, and gives to it no force or significance whatever. We may find an office and use for the word by interpreting it to signify parsonages 'of local churches or districts,' by which we suppose is meant local or district churches." Gray v. La Fayette County, 65 Wis. 570.

2. Suddenly Assaulted. — A statute provided that any person might kill any dog that suddenly assaulted him. It was held that one bitten while attempting to separate two fighting dogs was not suddenly assaulted. Spaight v. McGovern, 16 R. I. 658. See also the title ANIMALS, vol. 2, p. 373.

Suddenly Dead. — In Reg. v. Stephenson, 13 Q. B. D. 333, it was said: "The office of the

SUE. (See also SURT, post.) — To sue means to prosecute; to make legal claim; to seek for in law.¹

SUE OUT — SUING OUT. — To sue out means to obtain judicially; to issue. To sue out a writ is to obtain and issue it.² The legal signification of the term "suing out process" is to petition for and take out, or to apply for and obtain; as, to sue out a writ in chancery, or a pardon.³

SUFFER. — To suffer an act to be done, by a person who can prevent it, is to permit or consent to it; to approve of it, and not to hinder it. It implies a willingness of the mind.⁴ Every definition of "suffer" includes knowledge coroner existed before the statute De Officio Coronatoris (4 Edw. I., stat. 2 A. D. 1276). In that statute the phrase used is 'suddenly dead,' but the expression has received a recognized meaning, and does not include cases of death without violence and from ordinary natural causes." See also Rex v. Justices, 11 East 229. And see the title CORONERS, vol. 7, p. 603.

1. Sue — Civil Suit or Criminal Prosecution. — U. S. v. Moore, 11 Fed. Rep. 251, citing Webst. Dict. and holding that a statute providing that all fines, penalties, etc., might be sued for and recovered in the name of the United States did not limit the action to a civil suit, but included a prosecution by indictment.

Final Process. — In Vocht v. Kuklence, 119 Pa. St. 365, the trial court said: "To sue, according to Webster, 'is to seek justice or right from, by legal process.' This definition is broad enough to include final process." But on writ of error it was held that the statute authorizing a married woman to sue and be sued as if she were a feme sole did not authorize her arrest in satisfaction of a judgment for a tort committed by her during coverture.

Judgment by Confession. — A judgment by confession entered upon a promissory note providing for a "reasonable attorney's fee if sued" has been held not to authorize the taxation of an attorney's fee. Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 476.

2. Sue Out. — Waxahachie v. Coler, (C. C. A.) 92 Fed. Rep. 286.

3. Suing Out. — Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Barker, 50 Mo. App. 64; South Missouri Lumber Co. v. Wright, 114 Mo. 333.

Suing Out a Writ is the commencement of the action. Cox v. Cooper, 3 Ala. 256.

Delivery to Officer — Suing Out. — Suing out process means the delivery thereof to the sheriff or other officer authorized to execute it. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Barker, 50 Mo. App. 65. See also West v. Engel, 101 Ala. 509, holding that a summons cannot be said to be sued out until it passes from the hands of the clerk to the sheriff, or other proper officer, to be executed, or sent by mail or otherwise, with a bona fide, unequivocal intention to have it served. And see Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, 25 Ala. 235; Ex p. Locke, 46 Ala. 77.

Sued Out and Brought. — In Waxahachie v. Coler, (C. C. A.) 92 Fed. Rep. 286, it was said: "We find that the terms 'brought' and 'sued out,' as applied to writs of error, and meaning the issuance of the writ by proper authority and the filing of the same in the proper court, appear to be used synonymously in the statutes

4. Suffer. — Selleck v. Selleck, 19 Conn. 505.

To suffer is to allow; to permit; not to forbid or hinder; to tolerate. Duncan v. Landis, (C. C. A.) 106 Fed. Rep. 849. See also Gregory v. U. S., 17 Blatchf. (U. S.) 330.

Suffer and Permit Synonymous. — See PERMIT, vol. 22, p. 700, and see Duncan v. Landis, (C. C. A.) 106 Fed. Rep. 849; Ft. Wayne v. De Witt, 47 Ind. 394; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Long, 75 Pa. St. 257.

Suffer and Procure. (See also PROCURE, vol. 23, p. 163.) — In Campbell v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 2 Biss. (U. S.) 431, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,370, it was said: "I entirely agree with those courts which declare that the word suffer is different from the word 'procure'; suffer implies a passive condition, so to speak — as to allow, to permit — not a demonstrative, active course, like the word 'procure.' It is the very definition, I think, to apply to the case of pressure and powerful motives brought to bear upon a party. Under the influence of this pressure and the operation of these motives, he suffers a thing to be done — that is, allows or permits it — and the law intended to prevent this."

Suffer Incumbrance. (See also the title COVENANTS, vol. 8, p. 122.) — An incumbrance upon property at the time when the grantor acquired the title is not within a covenant against incumbrances done or suffered by him. Suffer, in such case, implies responsible control. Smith v. Eigerman, 5 Ind. App. 271, 51 Am. St. Rep. 283. See also Parker v. Parker, 93 Ala. 80; Brown v. Young, 69 Iowa 625; Comstock v. Smith, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 116.

In Hobson v. Middleton, 6 B. & C. 295, 13 E. C. L. 175, Bayley, J., said: "The words 'permitting and suffering' do not bear the same meaning as 'knowing of and being privy to;' the meaning of them is that the defendant should not concur in any act over which he had a control." See also Townson v. Green, 2 C. & P. 110, 12 E. C. L. 49; Stannard v. Forbes, 6 Ad. & El. 572, 33 E. C. L. 149.

Same — Assessment. — A title-insurance company excepted "defects and incumbrances arising after the date of this policy, or created or suffered by the insured." It was held that this exception did not include the incumbrance of a confirmed assessment existing upon the date of the execution or delivery of the policy. The court said: "It is not within the fair purport of the language to hold that an assessment which the insured was or might be powerless to prevent could be said to be suffered or voluntarily created by him." Trenton Potteries Co.

v. Title Guarantee, etc., Co., 50 N. Y. App. Div. 490.

Suffer Preference — Involuntary Act. (See also the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, vol. 16, pp. 661, 734.) — In Wilson v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 198, it was said: "In the case at bar, the warrant of attorney to confess judgment was indeed given by the debtor nearly thirteen years before. But being irrevocable and continuing in force, the debtor thereby, without any further act of his, 'suffered or permitted' a judgment to be entered against him, within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the effect of the enforcement of which judgment would be to enable the creditor to whom it was given to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than other creditors; and the lien obtained by which, in a proceeding begun within the four months, would be dissolved by the adjudication in bankruptcy, because 'its existence and enforcement will work a preference.' And the debtor did not, within five days before the sale of the property on execution, vacate or discharge such preference, or file a petition in bankruptcy. By failing to do so, he confessed that he was hopelessly insolvent, and consented to the preference that he failed to vacate."

As to the meaning of suffering a judgment or preference, see also In re Metzger Toy, etc., Co., 114 Fed. Rep. 958; Pirie v. Chicago Title, etc., Co., 182 U. S. 438.

Same — Nonresistance. — In New York Tenth Nat. Bank v. Warren, 96 U. S. 539, it was held that the mere nonresistance of a debtor to judicial proceedings against him, when the debt is due and there is no valid defense to it, is not suffering and giving a preference under the Bankrupt Act. See also In re Ogles, 93 Fed. Rep. 434; Wilson v. City Bank, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 473.

Same — Co-operation Necessary. — And in Duncan v. Landis, (C. C. A.) 106 Fed. Rep. 849, it was said: "The debtor must by this act consciously and voluntarily in some degree co-operate with the creditor in 'obtaining' the preference. He cannot suffer or permit what he cannot hinder."

Same — Intent. — In Scheuer v. Smith, etc., Book, etc., Co., (C. C. A.) 112 Fed. Rep. 410, it was said: "We consider that under said clause it is practically immaterial whether the insolvent debtor consents to and facilitates the obtaining of a preference through legal proceedings or actively opposes the same. In either event, the result is the same to creditors, and the words used in the statute, 'suffered or permitted,' do not involve any intent on the part of the insolvent." See also In re Moyer, 93 Fed. Rep. 188; In re Reichman, 91 Fed. Rep. 624.

Same — Splitting Up Cause of Action. — Splitting up a cause of action with the consent of the president of a corporation, so that the creditor might obtain a speedier judgment than otherwise, keeping silent as to the service of the summons, and refraining from putting the company into the hands of a receiver until after judgment was obtained, has been held to be suffering judgment with preferential intent. Rossman v. Seaver, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 661, affirmed 41 N. Y. App. Div. 603. Compare French v. Andrews, 145 N. Y. 441; Varnum v. Hart, 119 N. Y. 101.

Negligence. — But a man may be said to suffer a thing to be done if it is done through his negligence. Bosley v. Davies, 1 Q. B. D. 87; Hipkins v. Birmingham, etc., Gas Light Co., 6 H. & N. 250.

Suffer Cattle to Run at Large. (See also the titles ANIMALS, vol. 2, p. 354; FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1039.) — Where a statute provided that the owner of domestic animals should not suffer them to run at large, it was held that the word suffer implied a permission on the part of the owner. Selleck v. Selleck, 19 Conn. 505; Collinsville v. Scanland, 58 Ill. 221; Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 63 Ill. 472; Com. v. Fourteen Hogs, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 393.

But in Adams v. Nichols, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 319, it was said: "The word suffer, in the statute, correctly interpreted, as well as in its ordinary acceptation, means to allow, or permit; but whether it implies a negligent as well as a voluntary permission, it is unnecessary at this time to determine, though in my judgment it implies both, and is not to be restricted to a mere voluntary or wilful permission."

Gaming. — Under an English statute forbidding innkeepers, etc., to suffer gaming upon their premises, it has been held that a person suffers gaming if he or his servant in charge knows or ought to know that gaming is going on. Bond v. Evans, 21 Q. B. D. 249; Bosley v. Davies, 1 Q. B. D. 84; Redgate v. Haynes, 1 Q. B. D. 89; Crabtree v. Hole, 43 J. P. 799. See generally the titles GAMING, vol. 14, p. 664; GAMING HOUSES, vol. 14, p. 692.

2. Sufficient. — Pensacola, etc., R. Co. v. State, 25 Fla. 334.

Sufficient in Sense of Prima Facie. — Where a statute provided that a deed should be taken and considered by the court as sufficient evidence of the authority under which a sale was made, it was held that sufficient was used in the sense of prima facie. Parker v. Overman, 18 How. (U. S.) 137; Turner v. Smith, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 838.

Sufficient Distinguished from Conclusive. — Pensacola, etc., R. Co. v. State, 25 Fla. 335.

Feeley, 130 Mass. 12; Hillsborough v. Deering, 4 N. H. 86.

Sufficient Barrier — Excavation of Public Way. — In Myers v. Springfield, 112 Mass. 491, it was said: "As we understand the instructions given by the court to the jury, the 'sufficient barrier' therein spoken of does not mean one which should be absolutely safe under all contingencies, but one which would be sufficient if not thrown down or removed." See also Doherty v. Waltham, 4 Gray (Mass.) 596.

Sufficient Cause — Adjournment. — A statute provided that "when the pleadings of the parties shall have taken place, the justice shall, on the application of either party, if sufficient cause be shown upon oath, adjourn the cause for any time not exceeding thirty days." In construing this provision the court said: "The 'sufficient cause' here referred to means some good and sufficient legal cause or excuse for the delay asked, and not any pretext which in the arbitrary discretion of the party or justice might be deemed sufficient." School Dist. No. 7 v. Thompson, 5 Minn. 280. See also the title ADJOURNMENTS, 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 238.

Same — Change of Venue. (See also the title CHANGE OF VENUE, 4 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 373.) — In Ex p. Banks, 28 Ala. 40, it was said: "The code declares that 'the application must set forth specifically the reasons why,' etc. 'Good and sufficient cause,' 'sufficient cause,' and 'reasons why' are, to my comprehension, almost synonyms, when found in the statutes above quoted. Each of them supposes a ground, a cause, a reason, why the action of the court is invoked; but neither expression conveys the remotest idea of what the cause or reason shall consist of."

Same — English Bankruptcy Act of 1863. — See In re Jubb, (1897) 1 Q. B. 641; Ex p. Oram, 15 Q. B. D. 399.

Same — Removal of Public Officers. — See the title PUBLIC OFFICERS, vol. 23, p. 442.

Same — Revocation of Teacher's Certificate. — In Browne v. Gear, 21 Wash. 147, it was held that slight impropriety of conduct and inconsiderate language of a teacher, not involving moral turpitude, in endeavoring to secure a first-grade certificate, was not such sufficient cause as would warrant the revocation of a valid certificate held by her. See generally the title SCHOOLS, vol. 25, p. 8 et seq.

Same — Setting Aside Assessment for Damages. — In Chapman v. Groves, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 308, it was held that proof that an assessment of damages on a writ of ad quod damnum was either too high or too low furnished sufficient cause under the statute for setting it aside.

Sufficient to Constitute Cause of Defense. — In Angaletos v. Meridian Nat. Bank, 4 Ind. App. 573, it was said: "The code provides but one cause of demurrer to an answer, viz., that it does not state facts 'sufficient to constitute a cause of defense.' Section 346, Rev. Stat. 1881; Harrison School Tp. v. McGregor, 96 Ind. 189. It has been repeatedly held that a demurrer must substantially fulfil the statutory requirements, or it will not be error to overrule it. Lane v. State, 7 Ind. 426; Gordon v. Swift, 39 Ind. 212; Thomas v. Goodwine, 88 Ind. 458; State v. Younts, 89 Ind. 314; Hildebrand v. McCrum, 101 Ind. 61. In the case last cited a demurrer alleging that the answer did 'not state facts sufficient to constitute a bar to the plaintiff's complaint' was adjudged insufficient."

Sufficient Bond. — A bond given by a contractor employed to erect a county bridge, and, being for three years, not good under Code Ga. 1882, § 671 (Code 1895, § 673), which requires a bond to run for at least seven years, has been held to be a sufficient bond and good security under Code Ga. 1882, § 670 (Code 1895, § 602), so as to exempt the county from liability for damages sustained within three years by one injured in consequence of want of repair. Mappin v. Washington County, 92 Ga. 130.

Sufficient Provocation. — See PROVOCATION, vol. 23, p. 293.

Sufficient Railing. — In Lyman v. Amherst, 107 Mass. 339, it was held that a railing along a highway was sufficient, within Gen. Stat. Mass., c. 44, § 22, if it was suitable for the ordinary exigencies of travel upon such road at such place.

Sufficient Security. — Where a lease required that the lessee should give sufficient security for the rent, it was held that it made no difference whether the security was personal or real. Either might be sufficient, and the fact that the real estate had a previous mortgage upon it was no legal objection to its sufficiency. Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 97.

Sufficient Sureties. (See also the title SURETSHIP, post.) — The phrase "sufficient sureties" has been construed to mean two or more sureties. Blake v. Sherman, 12 Minn. 420; State v. Fitch, 30 Minn. 532.

"Three sufficient sureties" has been held to mean sureties each of whom was sufficient for the whole amount. Re Assiniboia Election, 4 Manitoba 328.

Upon the meaning of this phrase in an eminent-domain statute, the court said: "The words 'sufficient sureties' in the act must be construed to mean such sureties as at the time they are taken make it reasonably certain that the owner of the property taken can collect from them a just compensation." Wallace v. New Castle Northern R. Co., 138 Pa. St. 172.

"Sufficient Time" in a clause in a contract of sale, providing that the purchaser should "allow sufficient time" for the vendor of the article (a harvester) to put it in order, has been held to be equivalent to "reasonable time under the circumstances." Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Feary, 22 Neb. 53.

1. Sufficient Evidence is defined as that which SUFFICIENTLY.—See note 1.

SUFFOCATED.—See DROWNED, vol. 10, p. 265.

SUFFRAGE.—See the title ELECTIONS, vol. 10, p. 552.

SUGAR.—See note 2.

SUGGEST—SUGGESTION.—In practice, a suggestion is a statement or entry made on a record by way of information to the court; a statement made incidentally, or out of the course of pleading; a statement on record of some fact which has occurred in the progress of a cause, such as the death of a coplaintiff.*

SUGGESTIO FALSI.—See the title FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 76.

SUICIDE.—See the titles ACCIDENT INSURANCE, vol. 1, p. 284; ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT CRIME, vol. 3, p. 252; BENEFICIARIES (IN INSURANCE), vol. 3, p. 1016; BENEVOLENT OR BENEFICIAL ASSOCIATIONS, vol. 3, pp. 1087, 1088; LIFE INSURANCE, vol. 19, p. 39; MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, p. 83.

SUI JURIS.—A person who can validly contract and bind himself by a legal obligation, uncontrolled by any other person, is said to be sui juris; in other words, one subject to no incapacity such as nonage, coverture, or insanity is said to be sui juris.⁴

SUIT. (See also ACTION, vol. 1, p. 577; CAUSE, vol. 5, p. 772; PENDING, vol. 22, p. 655; PROCEEDING, vol. 23, p. 155; SUE, ante, p. 363; and see the title REMOVAL OF CAUSES, 18 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 150.)—"Suit," in its most comprehensive sense, applies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues, in such court, the remedy which the law affords to him for the redress of an injury or the recovery of a right.⁵

is satisfactory for the purpose. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Trammel, 53 Fed. Rep. 196. See also Com. v. Lawless, 103 Mass. 431.

Evidence Which Ought to Satisfy.—A statute provided that a mistake in names of parties might be shown by any sufficient evidence. It was held that evidence which ought to satisfy was sufficient. Wood v. Philadelphia, 27 Pa. St. 503.

Criminal Case—Charge Sustained.—See Jones v. State, 65 Ga. 510.

1. Sufficiently Feed and Water.—A statute provided that a carrier of live stock which should fail to feed and water live stock carried by it sufficiently should be liable to a penalty. It was held that the statute was not invalid in that it was too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to enable the court or jury to fix the penalty. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Gray, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. Rep. 837. See also the title CARRIERS OF LIVE STOCK, vol. 5, p. 436.

Sufficiently Proved.—The phrase "well and sufficiently proved" has been held to mean proved according to law. Beall v. Lynn, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 350.

Sufficiently and Securely.—See SECURE, SECURITY, ETC., vol. 25, p. 178.

2. Sugar-cane Seed.—See GRAIN, vol. 14, p. 110.

Sugar Refiners.—In Zimmerling v. Harding, 95 Fed. Rep. 130, it was held that persons engaged in boiling molasses, producing by the process several products, with the result of advancing the quality and value of the molasses which they boiled, were sugar refiners.

3 Suggestion.—Burr, L. Dict. In this sense are used the terms, suggestion of and to suggest the death of a party, that his representative may be substituted; to suggest diminution of record; to suggest freehold as security for costs, or in stay of execution. And. L. Dict. See also Garey v. Edwards, 15 Ala. 106, and see the title BONDS, 3 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 635.

Suggestion and Captation.—See CAPTATION, vol. 5, p. 142, and see the title UNDUE INFLUENCE.

4. Sui Juris—Age.—In Schreiner v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 12 N. Y. App. Div. 555, sui juris is defined in an instruction as meaning "of sufficient age and discretion and physical ability to know danger and exercise reasonable care for himself." See also Muller v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 18 N. Y. App. Div. 179; Penny v. Rochester R. Co., 7 N. Y. App. Div. 599.

In Ellick v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 15 N. Y. App. Div. 560, it was said: "But this boy was not an adult. True, he was sui juris. But that alone does not suffice to adjudge him guilty of a negligent act. His conduct must be measured by the obligation to exercise due care proportioned to the danger to be encountered."

Coverture.—In Hackett v. Moxley, 68 Vt. 210, it was said: "At the time of the sale, the defendant's wife was under coverture, and therefore not sui juris." 2 Rap. & L. Dict., tit. Sui Juris.

5. Suit.—Claffin v. Robbins, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 603, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,776; McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 333.

Suit "Is Undoubtedly Derived originally from the secta or suit of witnesses which every plaintiff was required to produce or offer to produce when he preferred his claim in court. Inde productis sectam—thereupon he brings suit—a form of words still continued." Ul- shafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. St. 174, citing 3 Black. Com. 295.

Chief Justice Marshall's Definitions.—In Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 464, Marshall, C. J., thus defined suit: "The term is certainly a very comprehensive one, and is understood to apply to any proceeding in a court of justice by which an individual pursues that remedy in a court of justice which the law affords him. The modes of proceeding may be various, but if a right is litigated between the parties in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the court is sought is a suit." This definition has been approved in the following cases: Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 474; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 566; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367; Sewing Mach. Co.'s Case, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 553; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 645; Miller v. Rapp, 7 Ind. App. 91; State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 304; Webb v. Allen, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 605.

And in Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 407, the same eminent authority declared a suit to be "a prosecution or pursuit of some claim, demand, or request. In law language, it is the prosecution of some demand in a court of justice." See also Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 30; Ex p. Munford, 57 Mo. 605; Callen v. Ellison, 13 Ohio St. 453; Ex p. Towles, 48 Tex. 433.

Other Definitions.—A suit is a lawful demand of one's right. 3 Black. Com. 116; Magill v. Parsons, 4 Conn. 322; McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 333; People v. Clarke, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 150, affirmed 9 N. Y. 349; McBride's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 483; In re Grape St., 103 Pa. St. 124.

Bracton, lib. 3, c. 1, fol. 98, defines suit as follows: "Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in iudicio, quod alicui debetur." See also Magill v. Parsons, 4 Conn. 322; McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 333; Peeler v. Norris, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 339.

Suit imports a legal demand of a civil right. Cannon v. Phillips, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 190; Peeler v. Norris, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 339.

Suit is a proceeding in a court of justice for the enforcement of a right. Drake v. Gilmore, 52 N. Y. 394.

Suit means any proceeding in a court for the purpose of obtaining such remedy as the law allows under the circumstances. Harris v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 312; State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 304.

A suit is defined to be an action or process for the recovery of a right or claim; a legal application to a court for justice; the prosecution of a right before any tribunal. Hendrix v. Kellogg, 32 Ga. 437.

Suit extends to any proceeding in a court of justice seeking a remedy which the law affords and to any legal application to a court of justice. Marion v. Ganby, 68 Iowa 142.

Term of Very Broad Signification.—Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 24. And see the definitions given above.

Suit and Case Synonymous.—See CASE, vol. 5, p. 752, and see Magill v. Parsons, 4 Conn. 322.

Suit and Cause Used Synonymously.—See CAUSE, vol. 5, p. 772, and see Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 634.

Suit and Cause of Action Distinguished.—See CAUSE, vol. 5, p. 774, and see Fish v. Farwell, 160 Ill. 236.

Controversy and Suit Synonymous.—See Briggs v. French, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 259; Nichols v. Bingham, 70 Vt. 320; and see CONTROVERSY, vol. 7, p. 459.

But it has been said that suit is not so broad as "controversy." See King v. McLean Asylum, (C. C. A.) 64 Fed. Rep. 336; Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264.

Not Restricted to Suit for Money.—The Constitution of Washington provided that "the legislature shall direct by law in what manner and in what courts suits may be brought against the state." In construing this provision in Northwestern, etc., Hypothec Bank v. State, 18 Wash. 73, the court said: "The word suits, as used in the constitution, * * * is not used in a restricted sense, nor limited to suits for the recovery of money only. Nothing in the provision warrants any such interpretation. We think the word was used in a more comprehensive sense."

Suit in Sense of Remedy.—Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Cornell University, 49 Wis. 164.

Two Parties Necessary—Claim Against County for Right of Way.—In Fuller v. Colfax County, 4 McCrary (U. S.) 537, it was held that a mere claim against a county for right of way for a public road, pending before the county board, did not constitute a suit. The court said: "Two parties to a suit seem to be almost indispensable: one who seeks redress, and the other who commits a wrong or withholds what is justly due another. The parties must stand in such relation to each other that the machinery of the court will operate on them when their powers and their aid are invoked. No such a condition of things existed so long as the claim remained before the county board. But when the appeal was taken, and docketed in the District Court, we then for the first time find a suit pending in the court, where none of the elements of either are wanting." See also Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio 502.

Violation of Duty.—In Horner v. Coffey, 25 Miss. 442, it was said: "A suit is but a remedy given by law to enable a party who has been injured by the act or violation of duty by another to recover damages equal to the injury or loss sustained. If the duty never existed, it could not be violated; and without both its existence and violation, there was no ground for a suit."

Judiciary Act.—As to the meaning of the term suit in the Judiciary Act, see Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 524; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540; Ex p. Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 112; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 375; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 22; Mississippi, etc., Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 406; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485; Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 78; Pacific R. Removal Cases, 115 U. S. 18; Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 124 U. S. 197; Delaware County v. Diebold Safe, etc., Co., 133 U. S. 486; Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 474.

Commence Suit.—See COMMENCE, vol. 6, p. 217.

Local and Transitory.—See LOCAL AND TRANSITORY ACTIONS, vol. 19, p. 483.

Illustrations. — In the note will be found cases holding different proceedings to be or not to be within the term "suit." ¹

1. Action of Account. — The term suit, it is said, is not a proper designation for an action of account. Mahar v. O'Hara, 9 Ill. 429.

Administrator's Sale. — In Ludlow v. Wade, 5 Ohio 494, it was held that an unexecuted order of court authorizing an administrator to sell the land of his intestate, was not a suit depending within the meaning of the saving clause of an act which provided that "nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect in any manner any suit or prosecution now depending and undetermined, but the same shall be carried on to final judgment and execution, agreeably to the provisions of any of the said laws."

An Admiralty Proceeding in personam against the master or owner of a vessel has been held to be a suit. The L. B. X., 88 Fed. Rep. 290.

Alimony. — In McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 332, it was held that a petition filed after a decree of divorce to reduce alimony formerly allowed was a suit within a statute relating to change of venue.

Assignee for Benefit of Creditors. — In Claffin v. Robbins, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 603, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,776, it was held that a proceeding under a statute against an assignee for the benefit of creditors by claimants whose claims had been rejected by the assignee was a suit within a removal act.

Attachment Held to Be Suit. — See Comer v. Heidelberg, 109 Ala. 224.

Proceedings of Boards, Commissioners, Etc. — In Dunn v. Pownall, 65 Vt. 116, it was said: "The rule adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States in respect of the removal of suits from the state courts to the federal courts is that a proceeding not in a court of justice, but carried on by executive officers in the exercise of their proper functions, as in the valuation of property for the just distribution of taxes or assessments, is purely administrative in its character, and cannot in any just sense be called a suit; and that an appeal in such a case to a board of assessors or commissioners having no jurisdictional powers, and authorized to determine only questions of quantity, proportion, and value, is not a suit, but that such an appeal becomes a suit if made to a court or tribunal having power to determine questions of law and fact, either with or without a jury, and there are parties litigant to contest the case on the one side and the other." Citing Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 467, in which case an appeal under a state law from an assessment of taxation to a "County Court," which, in respect to such proceedings, acts as a board of commissioners, without judicial powers, was held not to be a suit. See also Burlington v. Burlington Traction Co., 70 Vt. 491.

In Delaware County v. Diebold Safe, etc., Co., 133 U. S. 473, it was held that where a claim against a county was heard before county commissioners the proceedings were not a suit, but that an appeal from the decision of the commissioners, tried and determined by the Circuit Court of the county, was a suit. See also Gurnee v. Brunswick County, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 270.

In Calderwood v. Calderwood, 38 Vt. 171, it was held that a proceeding before commissioners appointed by the probate court to receive, examine, and adjust claims and demands against the estate was a suit within the meaning of a statute declaring that interest in the suit should not disqualify witnesses.

And in Massachusetts it has been held that proceedings before county commissioners upon a petition for the opening of a highway, in which counsel appear, witnesses are examined, and arguments are made as in other courts, are suits. Hyde Park v. Wiggins, 157 Mass. 94.

Collection of Taxes. — In In re Stutsman County, 88 Fed. Rep. 339, it was held that a statutory proceeding for the collection of delinquent taxes was a suit. See also Chauncey v. Wass, 35 Minn. 1; Wells County v. McHenry, 7 N. Dak. 246.

A Caveat was held to be a suit in Tennessee, where a statute had legalized it as the method of trying title to lands in certain cases. Peeler v. Norris, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 331.

Cartiorari. — A petition for a writ of certiorari has been held to be a suit. Hendrix v. Kellogg, 32 Ga. 437.

Contest of Election. — It has been held that there is a distinction between a mere contest of the result of an election and a suit for the office — i. e., a suit to try the right to the office. Thus, within a statute conferring jurisdiction upon a court over suits, complaints, and pleas, whenever the matter in controversy is of a certain value, it has been held that the mere contest of the result of an election was not a suit. Williamson v. Lane, 52 Tex. 344. See also Wright v. Fawcett, 42 Tex. 203; Banton v. Wilson, 4 Tex. 402; Bradley v. McCrabb, Dall. (Tex.) 504.

Defense. — That the term suit is not applicable to a defense, see the strong dissenting opinion of Miller, J., in New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 143. See also Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 409.

Divorce Proceedings. — See Ewing v. Ewing, 24 Ind. 468.

Eminent Domain. — A proceeding to take land for public uses by condemnation is a suit. Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367, wherein the court distinguished this case and that of the assessment of property for the purpose of taxation. See also Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 477, cited supra, this note; Searl v. School Dist. No. 2, 124 U. S. 197; Mississippi, etc., Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 406; Colorado Midland R. Co. v. Jones, 29 Fed. Rep. 193; Mineral Range R. Co. v. Detroit, etc., Copper Co., 25 Fed. Rep. 515; Garrison v. New York, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 196; Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Cornell University, 49 Wis. 164.

In Marion v. Ganby, 68 Iowa 142, it was held that a proceeding begun in the Circuit Court, under Code Iowa, § 476, in force in 1885, to condemn land for the extension of a street was a suit.

So a proceeding upon a petition to a court to appoint a jury of view to report on the petitioner's claim for damages caused by the alteration of the grade of a street has been held to be a suit. In re Grape St., 103 Pa. St. 124.

Same — Civil Suit. — In Kennebec Water Dist. v. Waterville, 96 Me. 249, it was said: "A proceeding for assessing the amount of just compensation for private property taken for public uses is not 'a civil suit.' It is a special proceeding, provided and authorized by the sovereign power by whose authority the property is taken, to determine a specific fact."

Estate of Decedents. — A claim filed in court against the estate of a decedent has been held to be a suit. Reynolds v. Crook, 95 Ala. 570.

Execution. — In Vanderveer v. Conover, 16 N. J. L. 496, it was said: "A doubt was flung out whether an execution may not lie, as the statute bars only 'an action or suit;' but though an execution be perhaps strictly no action, it is technically a suit at law, awardable only on the suit of the party. 1 Inst. 291." And that an execution is a suit, see Ex p. Muller, 129 Ala. 137; Ulshafer v. St wart, 71 Pa. St. 174. See also Vocht v. Kuklence, 119 Pa. St. 365, and see ACTION, vol. 1, p. 578.

So a motion for an execution against the stockholders after a return nulla bona of an execution against a corporation has been held to be a suit. Lackawanna Coal, etc., Co. v. Bates, 56 Fed. Rep. 738.

Flowing Lands. — In Henderson v. Adams, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 610, it was held that a complaint for flowing lands was not a demand which could be the subject of a suit in equity, but was a particular statutory mode of redress.

A Proceeding to Foreclose a Mortgage by advertisement was held not to be a suit in Hall v. Bartlett, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 300.

Foreign Attachment — Garnishment. — A proceeding by a creditor of the insured by foreign attachment against the insurer has been held to be a suit within a clause in an insurance policy requiring suits to be begun within a year after loss. Harris v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 310; Matter of Aycinena, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 690. See also ACTION, vol. 1, p. 580, and the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 392.

So garnishment proceedings have been held to be suits. Tunstal v. Worthington, Hempst. (U. S.) 662; Moore v. Stainton, 22 Ala. 831. See also Witherspoon v. Barber, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 335; Thomas v. Hopper, 5 Ala. 442; Travis v. Tarrt, 8 Ala. 574.

Habeas Corpus. — A proceeding for a writ of habeas corpus has been held to be a suit. Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540; Ex p. Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 113; Coston v. Coston, 25 Md. 507; State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 304.

Highway. — A proceeding for the laying out of a highway has been held to be a suit. Hyde Park v. Wiggan, 157 Mass. 94; Dunn v. Pownal, 65 Vt. 116. Compare Fuller v. Colfax County, 4 McCrary (U. S.) 537, set out in the preceding note.

Judgment. — Within the saving clause of a repealing act an unsatisfied judgment was held to be a suit. Dobbins v. Peoria First Nat. Bank, 112 Ill. 566. See also Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. St. 174.

A Judgment by Confession has been held not to be a suit. Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 471.

Mandamus. — A proceeding for mandamus is a suit at law. Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672; American Express Co. v. Michigan, 177 U. S. 404; Roodhouse v. Briggs, 194 Ill. 435.

And, where an Illinois statute required all suits against a county to be brought in the Circuit Court, the term was held to be applicable to a proceeding by mandamus. McBane v. People, 50 Ill. 503. See also State v. Jennings, 56 Wis. 120.

Petition. — Suit includes a proceeding on a petition. Re Wallis, 23 L. R. Ir. 7.

Probate Proceedings. — The granting of probate ex parte is not a suit; yet, if a contest arises, and is carried on between parties litigating with each other, the proceeding then becomes a suit. Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485; Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73; Upshur County v. Rich, 135 U. S. 476; Haven v. Hilliard, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 19; Davis v. Livingston, 6 Ohio 225; Martin v. McAdams, 87 Tex. 225. See also Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio 502, stated and quoted under ACTION, vol. 1, p. 581.

In Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 24, it was held that a suit to annul a will as a muniment of title and to restrain the enforcement of a decree admitting it to probate was in essential particulars a suit in equity.

In Hanson v. Towle, 19 Kan. 279, it was said: "The word suit is general, and includes proceedings to establish claims in the Probate as well as the District Court."

Prohibition. — In Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449, the writ of prohibition was held to be a suit within the federal Judiciary Act providing for the removal of suits from state to federal courts.

Poor Debtor. — In Matter of Jenckes, 6 R. I. 18, it was held that the application of a poor debtor before a master in chancery to be admitted to the poor debtor's oath was a civil suit.

Redemption of Land from Taxes. — In Rawson v. Boughton, 5 Ohio 328, it was held that an application to redeem land sold for taxes was in the nature of a suit.

Proceedings in Rem have been held to be a suit. Harris v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 310.

In Bailey v. Sundberg, 1 U. S. App. 105, it was said: "A suit in rem is, in substance, a suit against all parties in interest in the res to the extent of their interests, and all such parties are parties to the suit, because they can intervene and make themselves actual parties and bring their rights before the court."

Scire Facias. — A proceeding in the nature of scire facias to repeal letters patent has been held to be a suit. People v. Clarke, 10 Barb. (U. S.) 150, affirmed 9 N. Y. 349. Compare Heath v. Bates, 70 Ga. 633, stated and quoted under ACTION, vol. 1, p. 582.

Set-off. — See Millet v. Watkins, 4 Bush (Ky.) 642, stated under ACTION, vol. 1, p. 582. See also Warfield v. Gardner, 79 Ky. 583.

Suit Includes Special Proceedings. — Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Cornell University, 49 Wis. 164.

Statutory Liability of Stockholders. — An action brought by a receiver of a national bank to enforce the statutory liability of a stock-used interchangeably, the former is the more comprehensive.¹ Again, "suit" applies to proceedings both at law and in equity, while "action" is properly confined to proceedings at law.²

Criminal Prosecution.—In its most extended sense the word "suit" includes not only a civil action, but also a criminal prosecution, as an indictment, an information, a conviction by a magistrate.³

SUITABLE.—Suitable means fitting; capable of suiting; appropriate.⁴

holder has been held to be a suit at common law. Stephens v. Bernays, 41 Fed. Rep. 401; Stephens v. Bernays, 119 Mo. 143. See also Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 76.

Summary Proceedings.—If before judgment in an attachment suit in a state court the defendant is adjudged a bankrupt by the United States District Court, the attaching court loses all jurisdiction, and the district court may punish the subsequent intermeddling of the attaching creditor with the property attached by a summary proceeding, on its own motion by virtue of its inherent powers. Such a proceeding is not a suit in the ordinary meaning of the term, nor within the Bankruptcy Act, 1898, § 23, subd. b. In re Tune, 115 Fed. Rep. 906.

Writ of Error.—A writ of error was held not to be a suit within a statute providing that suits should not abate under certain circumstances. Overseers of Poor v. Beedle, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 11, quoted under ACTION, vol. 1, p. 578. See also McDonald v. Savings Bank, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35.

In Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 409, it was said: "A writ of error, then, is in the nature of a suit or action when it is to restore the party who obtains it to the possession of anything which is withheld from him, not when its operation is entirely defensive." See also King v. McLean Asylum, (C. C. A.) 64 Fed. Rep. 336.

Writ of Possession.—That a writ of possession is a suit, see Ex p. Miller, 129 Ala. 137.

But it has been said that suit is more properly applied to proceedings in chancery. McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 332; Miller v. Rapp, 7 Ind. App. 91; Hall v. Bartlett, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 300.

3. Suit May Include Criminal Prosecutions.—U. S. v. Mann, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 177; U. S. v. Moore, 11 Fed. Rep. 251; Snowden v. State, 69 Md. 207; *Com. v. low v. Wade, 5 Ohio 508. See also Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 76; State v. Poll, 1 Hawks (8 N. Car.) 442, 9 Am. Dec. 655.

Suits for Penalties and Forfeitures.—In U. S. v. Mann, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 177, it was held that the term "suits for penalties and forfeitures" as used in an act of Congress conferring exclusive jurisdiction of all suits for penalties and forfeitures upon the District Courts, must be restrained to such penalties and forfeitures as might be sued for in a civil action, as for instance an action for debt or an information for debt.

4. Suitable.—White v. U. S. 69 Fed. Rep. 93, holding that if an acticle is actually, practically, and commercially fitted for a given purpose, it is suitable although it is not commonly used for such purpose.

Uncertainty.—An ordinance prohibited "any awning, except the same be upon a suitable frame, and attached entirely to the building, which awning shall not when extended be less than six feet from the sidewalk." It was held that the ordinance was invalid and void for uncertainty because the word suitable had no definite and determined meaning in the connection in which it was used, and the defendant could not know that he had done any act which was prohibited by the ordinance. State v. Clarke, 69 Conn. 371. See generally the title STATUTES, vol. 26, p. 656.

Suitable and Adequate Distinguished.—In St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. Eastman, 20 Minn. 277, in construing the words "suitable precautions" in a contract for the construction of a tunnel, it was said: "The ordinary and general signification of suitable is 'likely to suit,' 'capable of suiting,' 'adapted.' This is by no means equivalent to 'adequate.' That which is adequate must be suitable, but that which is suitable may not be adequate. What precautions are suitable for a particular purpose is a matter of judgment, and the best judgment may be erroneous, or the cautionary measures suggested by it may, for other reasons, prove to be ineffectual for the purposes for which they were designed; therefore 'all suitable precautions' may not be adequate to prevent the injury."

Suitable Age.—In Temple v. Norris, 53 Minn. 286, it was held that a person who had attained the age of fourteen years was prima facie a person of suitable age and discretion, within the meaning of a statute regulating the manner of service of process. See generally the title SERVICE OF PROCESS AND PAPERS, 19 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 567.

Suitable Bridges.—In a Massachusetts statute providing that a railroad might build "suitable bridges," the term was held to mean such bridges as, in the judgment of the board of railroad commissioners, the safety and convenience

SULPHURETS. — See note 4.

SUM. — "One of the lexical definitions of the word 'sum,' and the sense in which it is most commonly used, is 'money.' 'A quantity of money or currency; any amount indefinitely; as, a sum of money, a small sum, or a large sum.'" of the public and the interest of the railroad corporation required. Worcester v. Railroad Com'rs, 113 Mass. 161.

Suitable for Cultivation. — See the title STATE AND PUBLIC LANDS, vol. 26, p. 262.

Suitable Forms. — Where a statute prescribed certain forms to be used in prosecutions for offenses defined, but provided that "this shall not be so construed as to prohibit the use of other suitable forms," it was held that a form which omitted a material allegation, expressly required by the statute, was not a "suitable form," within the saving clause. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 105 Mass. 178.

Suitable Lots. — Where a grant of mining rights provided that the grantee might subdivide the land into suitable lots, it was held that by this phrase lots fitted for mining purposes were intended. Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. St. 246.

Suitable Person. — Where a statute authorized a justice of the peace to empower any suitable person, not being a party to the action, to serve process, it was held that a relative of the plaintiff was not thereby excluded. Mudrock v. Phillips, 65 Wis. 626. See generally the title SERVICE OF PROCESS AND PAPERS, 19 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 590 et seq.

Same — Assignment for Benefit of Creditors. — A statute provided that in case of a vacancy in the office of assignee in any assignment for benefit of creditors, the court should appoint to the vacancy the person nominated by a majority of the creditors, provided such nominee was a suitable person. In construing this statute the court said: "A suitable person, within the meaning of the statute, obviously does not mean the most suitable. The court has no authority to reject the nominee of creditors merely because a better person, in the judgment of the presiding judge, can be obtained." State v. Johnson, 105 Wis. 182.

Same — Administration. (See also the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 11, p. 720.) — A statute authorized the grant of administration to a "suitable person." It was held that "suitable person" meant proper and competent person, and intended a legal suitability, and not some vague and undefinable quality. Peters v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 207.

Suitable Place. — See Crowell v. Londonderry, 63 N. H. 42, stated under the title CEMETERIES, vol. 5, p. 782.

1. Suited. — Under an act of Congress providing that a dramatic composition to be entitled to copyright must be suited for public representation, it was held that by the word suited was not meant simply that the composition should be adapted to the stage, and capable of being produced upon it, but that to be suited to public representation, it must be morally fit to be represented. Martinetti v. Maguire, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 362. See also the title COPYRIGHT, vol. 7, pp. 531, 538.

2. Suitor. — In Carney v. State, 79 Ala. 18, it was held that a witness in an action for seduction should not have been allowed to testify that the accused "acted toward" the prosecutrix "as a suitor." The court said: "A suitor, in the sense here employed, is 'one who solicits a woman in marriage. We think this was not a subject for expert or opinion evidence.'"

3. Sulphide of Zinc. — See Gabriel v. U. S., 114 Fed. Rep. 401.

4. Sulphurets. — See Fox v. Hale, etc., Silver Min. Co., 108 Cal. 397.

5. Sum. — Webster's Dict., followed in U. S. v. Van Auken, 96 U. S. 366, in which case it was held that a statute which makes it an offense to circulate any obligation for a less sum than one dollar, intended to circulate as money, is not violated by circulating a note payable not in money, but in goods.

The Word "Sum" of Itself Imports a Sum of Money. — This is in fact its general meaning when the term is used with reference to values. Wetz v. Elliott, 4 Okla. 623; Paul v. Grimm, 165 Pa. St. 143.

A decree declaring that an estate is chargeable for sums advanced cannot be construed to include advances in the shape of personal services rendered. Hodges v. Hodges, 9 R. I. 32.

Revenue Act. — A statute whose main object was taxation authorized the treasurer to collect sums to be paid by curators of vacant successions. It was held to be restricted to sums that should go into the treasury as revenue, and not to include those which should be deposited there for absent heirs, and which constituted no part of the revenue. D'Aquin's Succession, 9 La. Ann. 400; Leake v. Linton, 6 La. Ann. 262.

Sum of Money Claimed to Be Due. — See Reg. v. Kerswill, (1895) 1 Q. B. 1.

Amount in Controversy. (See generally the title AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY, 1 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 702.) — A statute provided: "Either party may appeal from a judgment given in a justice's court in a civil action for a sum not less than twenty dollars; or for the recovery of personal property of the value of not less than twenty dollars, exclusive of costs," etc. In construing this provision the court said: "The word sum in this section evidently refers to the amount of the judgment given by the justice rather than to the amount in controversy between the parties, as is claimed by the respondent." Stoll v. Hoback, 2 Oregon 226.

SUMMARILY RECOVERED — SUMMARY PROCEEDING.

SUMMARILY RECOVERED. — See note 1.

SUMMARY PROCEEDING. (See also the title SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS, 20 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1071.) — A summary proceeding is defined as any proceeding by which a controversy is settled, case disposed of, or trial conducted in a prompt, simple manner without the aid of a jury.²

In Kline v. Wood, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 301, it was said: "Sum in controversy does not signify a precise sum in numero, no more than the word 'demand' does; demand and sum in controversy are the same."

In Joule v. Taylor, 7 Exch. 58, 21 L. J. Exch. 31, sum was held to be equivalent to "debt" in a statute limiting the jurisdiction of a court to actions wherein the sum or damages to be recovered did not exceed fifty pounds.

Same — Sum in Dispute. — In Petrie v. Machan, 28 Ont. 504, it was held, where the subject-matter of a claim in a division court was one cause of action exceeding one hundred dollars, and the amount recovered at the trial was under that sum, that an appeal lay to a division court under section 148 of the Ontario Division Courts Acts, the sum in dispute upon the appeal being the amount claimed, and not that amount less the sum recovered at the trial.

Same — Sum in Question. — In construing a statute which provided that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace should not extend to any cases where the sum in question should exceed one hundred dollars, the court said: "The words 'sum in question,' in this section, cannot mean the amount claimed by the plaintiff, as that construction would deprive the justice of jurisdiction in all that numerous class of cases of mutual accounts where the dealings on either side exceed a hundred dollars, yet where the balance is quite small." Moore v. Darrow, 11 Neb. 464.

Sum Demanded. — In an action upon a note the sum demanded has been held to mean the principal of the note. Brickell v. Bell, 84 N. Car. 85. See also Hedgecock v. Davis, 64 N. Car. 650; Dalton v. Webster, 82 N. Car. 279; Derr v. Stubbs, 83 N. Car. 539.

Sum Periodically Payable, within the meaning of an English stamp act taxing annuities or sums periodically payable, has been held to mean the sum payable at the periods stated in the instrument. Clifford v. Inland Revenue Com'rs, (1896) 2 Q. B. 195.

1. Summarily Recovered. — In Reg. v. Pratt, L. R. 5 Q. B. 181, Blackburn, J., said: "There are many cases in which sums of money are recoverable summarily before a justice, and it was argued that 'summarily recoverable' is a term of art, confined to cases in which, after summons and hearing, the justice awards a sum to be paid. But I do not agree that the term 'recoverable summarily' is to be so confined; no doubt a sum is recovered, more strictly speaking, where the justice has to adjudicate; but there is a secondary sense in which, though the sum has been awarded or determined beforehand, as in the case of a poor rate, or in this very case of costs awarded by Quarter Sessions, the word 'recoverable' is applied to the mode of enforcing the sum previously determined."

2. Summary Proceeding. — Western, etc., R. Co. v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 537.

Common Law — Abatement of Nuisances. — In Western, etc., R. Co. v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 537, it was said: "A summary proceeding is thus defined by Mr. Bouvier: 'A form of trial in which the ancient, established course of legal proceedings is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury,' etc. And this eminent lexicographer, citing Blackstone and Chancellor Kent, together with a number of adjudicated cases, says, referring to such a proceeding, that in no case can a party be tried summarily unless such proceedings are authorized by legislative authority except, perhaps, in cases of contempt; for the common law is a stranger to such a mode of trial." And it was held that "the power given to abate nuisances in a summary manner does not at all mean that they may be abated without notice or hearing, but simply that it may be done without a trial in the ordinary forms prescribed by law for a regular judicial procedure."

Game Laws. — In Schneider v. Marinelli, 62 N. J. L. 739, it was held that the proceedings of the Court of Common Pleas in appeals under the New Jersey Game and Fish Act were not summary in the sense that the record of conviction must set forth the evidence on which the conviction rested.

I. DEFINITION AND SCOPE OF TITLE—Definition—The term "summary proceedings," as used here, designates those proceedings before judicial tribunals which are of an immediate, speedy, or peremptory nature. Proceedings are said to be summary when they are short and simple in comparison with regular or formal proceedings, from which they usually differ in that they dispense with the aid of a jury.¹

Scope of Title.—No attempt will be made to enumerate the cases in which summary proceedings are allowed,² nor to state the procedure governing proceedings of a summary nature,³ but this title will deal mainly with the question of the constitutionality of these proceedings.

II. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES AUTHORIZING SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS.—The statutes which authorize summary proceedings, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.⁴

III. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS — 1. General Rule. — Constitutional provisions as to the right to trial by jury do not extend the right, but only secure it in cases in which it was a matter of right before.¹

2. Prosecutions for Minor Offenses. — Summary proceedings are by statute in many of the United States and in England authorized in prosecutions for minor offenses. In these cases there is no intervention of a jury, but the trial is concluded before the magistrate or justice of the peace.² Such proceedings, in the case of minor and petty offenses, are not in violation of constitutional provisions declaring generally that the right to trial by jury shall remain inviolate.³ Such minor offenses are sometimes excepted by the terms of the constitutional provision securing the right of trial by jury.⁴

What Are Petty Offenses. — It is often a matter of great difficulty to decide whether a particular offense is or is not such a petty offense as is not within a constitutional provision securing the right of trial by jury.⁵ On the ground that the keeping of a house of ill-fame was an indictable offense by the common law, a person accused of the offense is entitled to a trial by jury.⁶ And it has been held that the right of trial by jury is secured to a defendant in a prosecution for receiving stolen property,⁷ for the offense of gaming,⁸ for petit larceny,⁹ and for assault and battery.¹⁰ An infant cannot, without a trial by jury, be committed to a reformatory or similar institution on a charge of burglary¹ or similar offense.² But it has been held that the commitment of a child to an industrial school corporation, not as a punishment for crime, but to furnish the child needed guardianship, maintenance, and care, for its benefit and that of society, is not an interference with personal liberty, requiring a trial by jury to justify it.³ The legislature may provide for summary proceedings without a jury in the case of vagrancy,⁴ in proceedings for the conviction and punishment of those who frequent public places for unlawful purposes,⁵ in proceedings to compel a person to give security to keep the peace,⁶ or in proceedings to impose fines for the breach of military duty.⁷ It has been stated as a general rule that the right of trial by jury does not exist where the penalty is merely a fine, imprisonment being authorized only as a means of enforcing payment of the fine.⁸ On the ground that the offenses were punishable by a fine only, it has been held that the right to a trial by jury did not exist in a prosecution for the violation of statutes regulating the use of highways,⁹ a prosecution for disturbing a religious meeting,¹⁰ and a prosecution for creating and maintaining a nuisance.¹¹

3. Prosecutions for New Statutory Offenses. — There is some authority to the effect that a statute making a new offense may authorize a prosecution before courts of inferior jurisdiction by summary proceedings without a jury and yet not violate a constitutional requirement that trial by jury shall remain inviolate.¹² But according to what seems to be the better view, a statutory offense, which is created by statute after the adoption of a constitutional provision guaranteeing the right of trial by jury, is or is not triable by jury, according to its status as falling naturally within a class of offenses which were or which were not so tried before the adoption of the constitution.¹³

4. Proceedings to Punish for Contempt. — Since contempt was punished summarily at the common law, a summary commitment for contempt is not in violation of the constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law,¹⁴ or the constitutional right to trial by jury.¹⁵

5. Proceedings to Disbar Attorneys. — An attorney who is called upon to defend proceedings for his disbarment has never been entitled to a jury trial.¹⁶ Nor is a defendant in a proceeding to revoke an order of a court admitting an attorney to practice law, obtained by fraud and deceit, entitled to a jury trial.¹⁷

the power upon municipal tribunals sitting within the bounds of the municipal corporation,¹ of enforcing the ordinances or by-laws of the corporation in summary proceedings.²

Constitutionality of the Proceedings. — These proceedings for the punishment of offenders against the ordinances, which are made in virtue of the implied or incidental power of the corporation, or in the exercise of its legitimate police authority, for the preservation of peace, good order, safety, and health, and which relate to minor acts and matters, are not usually or properly regarded as criminal, and hence are not in contravention of the constitutional guaranty of trial by jury in criminal cases.³ And, moreover, since the constitutional provisions preserving the right of trial by jury do not extend the right, but merely secure it in the cases in which it was a matter of right before, these proceedings are not interdicted thereby, for they were in general use at the time of the adoption of the different constitutions.⁴

Same — When Act Violates a State Law. — It has been held sometimes that under constitutions summary proceedings of this kind can be employed only in the trial of such offenses as are "not embraced in the public criminal statutes of the state," and that where the act charged constitutes an offense against the criminal law of the state, a person charged with such act cannot be tried by a municipal court without a jury, even though such act may be a violation of an ordinance of the municipality.⁵ This view seems based on the idea that otherwise a person might be liable to be tried and punished twice for the same offense. But this reason can have no force in those states where the same act may constitute an offense against both the state and the municipal corporation, and both offenses be punished without violating any constitutional principle. In the courts where this view is held it has been denied that the test is whether the act prohibited by ordinance is embraced in and made indictable by the criminal code of the state, and the true criterion declared to be rather whether it may not be an act not only against the peace and dignity of the state, but also subversive of, or dangerous to, the peace, good order, safety, or health of the municipality.¹

7. Statutory Civil Proceedings — a. IN GENERAL. — On the ground that the constitutional provision giving a right to trial by jury merely secures the right as it had previously been enjoyed, it has frequently been held that the provision does not introduce the right into special summary proceedings unknown to the common law, which are authorized by statutes that make no provision for trial by jury.² Thus it has been held that the right of trial by jury may be denied in proceedings to compel a person to answer touching his possession

In Es p. Slattery, 3 Ark. 484, it was held that a person might be proceeded against before a corporation court for using obscene language on the street, because such an offense was not declared criminal by any statute of the state.

In Slaughter v. People, a Dougl. (Mich.) 334, note, where the constitution provided that "no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense unless on the presentment or indictment of a grand jury," it was held that an ordinance prescribing the punishment for keeping a house of ill-fame within the limits of the city, and providing for conviction of offenders by the mayor's court without presentment of a grand jury, was valid.

Under a constitution declaring "that no freeman shall be put to answer any criminal charge but by indictment," etc., and "that no freeman shall be convicted of any crime but by the unanimous verdict of a jury of good and lawful men in open court, as heretofore used," an act of the legislature which sought to confer upon the courts of a corporate town summary jurisdiction to try a person for acts which are indictable or are criminal offenses, in that it gave to an officer of the town the power of trying assault and battery or other crimes, was held unconstitutional because it violated both provisions of the constitution. State v. Moss, 2 Jones L. (47 N. Car.) 66.

In Burns v. La Grange, 17 Tex. 415, under a constitutional provision that "in all cases where justices of the peace or other judicial officers of inferior tribunals shall have jurisdiction in the trial of causes where the penalty for the violation of a law is fine and imprisonment (except in cases of contempt), the accused shall have the right of trial by jury," it was held that the mayor's court could not be given the power to try a person for assault summarily and without a jury.

The extent of the right to prosecute violations of municipal ordinances in summary proceedings which will be permitted by the authorities holding this view, has been stated as follows: "Violations of municipal by-laws proper, such as fall within the description of municipal police regulations — as, for example, those concerning markets, streets, water works, city officers, etc., and which relate to acts and omissions that are not embraced in the general criminal legislation of the state, the legislature may authorize to be prosecuted in a summary manner, by and in the name of the corporation, and need not provide for a trial by jury. Such acts and omissions are not crimes or misdemeanors to which the constitutional right of trial by jury extends." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 433. See Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540.

b. PROCEEDINGS UPON BONDS. — It is within the power of the legislature to prescribe summary proceedings for the enforcement of bonds of various kinds.³ Thus, proceeding summarily upon an official bond, in pursuance of a statute which was in existence at the time of the execution of the bond, is not an infringement of the right to trial by jury.⁴ It has similarly been held, where a statute authorized summary judgment upon an appeal bond operating as a supersedeas, and such proceedings were had in pursuance of a rule of court, that a surety had no right to trial by jury, for, by becoming a surety, he submitted himself to be governed by the fixed rules which regulate the practice of the court.⁵

c. PROCEEDINGS FOR COLLECTION OF NEGOTIABLE PAPER. — The constitutionality of summary proceedings for the collection of negotiable paper is sustainable upon the theory that the obligor, in entering into the contract, consents to the form of the remedy. Thus, a person may waive his right to trial by jury, by giving a note payable to a bank the charter of which authorizes collection by summary process.⁶ Legislation authorizing these proceedings is intended only to secure a prompt and speedy remedy, and not to deprive the defendant of any defense founded upon real and substantial merit which he would have in the regular plenary action.⁷

d. ACTION OF BOOK ACCOUNT. — In Vermont it has been held that in view of the immemorial practice of proceeding to trial without a jury in actions of book account, a party, in an action of that kind, is not entitled to a trial by jury on the merits of the case by virtue of the constitutional provision to the effect that "when any issue in fact proper for the cognizance of a jury is joined in a court of law, the parties have a right to trial by jury, which ought to be held sacred."⁸

e. PROCEEDINGS AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICERS — Proceedings for Removal. — Proceedings for the removal of public officers are usually of a summary character.⁹ The action of a court in removing one of its officers has been declared not to be for the purpose of punishment, but the proceeding is, in its nature, civil, and for the purpose of preserving the courts of justice from the official

It has been held that a statute authorizing judgment to be entered on motion, for a breach of an agreement thereafter to be made to pay administration of unfit persons, so that the constitutional provisions which declare that no person shall be held to answer for capital or otherwise infamous crimes, unless on a presentment or indictment by a grand jury, and that the trial for all crimes, except for cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, have no relation to such a proceeding, although the offense which prompts the removal is indictable.¹ It has also been said that the acceptance of an office under a law which denies the officer the right to have the question of his removal tried by a jury, constitutes a waiver of the right, if any such right otherwise exists.²

Proceedings to Enforce Performance of Duties. — The courts have frequently upheld the validity of statutes prescribing summary proceedings to amerce sheriffs and constables for failure or refusal to execute and return process,³ and similar proceedings against sheriffs who fail to pay over money,⁴ and against tax collectors for a failure to collect and pay over taxes.⁵

8. Effect of Giving Ultimate Trial by Jury. — The statutes authorizing summary proceedings sometimes provide for a trial by a committing magistrate without the intervention of a jury, but give the accused a right of appeal and to a trial by a jury in the appellate court. It has been held that a statute which, although it authorizes a summary conviction in the first instance, gives a trial by jury in the appellate court, subject only to the requirement of giving bail for his appearance there, or, in default of bail, being committed to jail, is not unconstitutional as impairing the right of trial by jury.⁶ If one does not choose to appeal, or to prosecute his appeal after it is taken, he waives his right to a jury trial.⁷ The analogous practice in civil cases has been declared permissible, though constitutional provisions secure the right of trial by jury.⁸ It has been held recently, however, by the United States Supreme Court, that in the case of so grave a crime as conspiracy, the accused is entitled to a jury in the court of first instance.⁹

such conditions and restrictions as would, in effect, amount to a denial of trial by jury. It has been said that a statute which renders it difficult for the accused to obtain the privilege of a trial by jury, beyond what public necessity requires, as where the statute requires conditions for the purpose of prosecuting a trial by jury, impairs individual rights and is inconsistent with the constitutional guaranty.¹

Reasonableness of Restrictions. — It has been held that the constitutional right to trial by a jury is not impaired because the right to an appeal is conditional on the appellant making oath "that he verily believes that injustice has been done him, and that the appeal is not made for the purpose of delay,"² or on his giving bonds for costs.³ On the other hand it has been held that the constitutional right is violated when the appellant is required to give a bond with sureties,⁴ to enter into a recognizance conditioned for his personal appearance before the appellate court "and for the payment of such fine and costs as shall be imposed on him if the case shall be determined against the appellant,"⁵ or to give a bond for a large amount that he will not repeat the offense with which he is charged.⁶ And a statute taking away from a person charged with assault and battery the right to give bail for his appearance at the next criminal court having jurisdiction, was held an infringement of the right to trial by jury.⁷

540. This case came up from the District of Columbia. The court, while conceding that there was a class of petty or minor offenses which might well be tried in the court of first instance without a jury, declared its opinion that the offense with which the accused was charged did not belong to that class, being by no means a petty or trivial offense, but one of a grave character affecting the public at large. The court said that "To accord to the accused a right to be tried by a jury in an appellate court after he has been once fully tried otherwise than by a jury in the court of original jurisdiction, and sentenced to pay a fine or be imprisoned for not paying it, does not satisfy the requirements of the [United States] constitution." I. INTRODUCTORY; OUTLINE AND PURPOSE OF STATUTES.—In many of the states there have been enacted statutes providing that the entire estate of a decedent shall be vested in his widow or minor children in case it does not exceed in value a certain specified amount, or, in some states, in case it does not exceed the limit fixed by law as the allowance for the support of the widow and orphans or the exemptions allowed in their favor.¹ Rights more or less analogous are secured to the widow and children by statutes of other types.²

In Louisiana it has been said that if a succession would not have defrayed the expenses of administration the widow was not bound to have it administered. Soubiran v. Rivollet, 4 La. Ann. 328.

In Massachusetts it has been held that the judge of a probate court may allow the widow of an intestate the whole of the personal estate unless the amount be so great as to make the allowance extravagant. Brazer v. Dean, 15 Mass. 183. See also the title ALLOWANCES, vol. 2, p. 156.

Under the Pennsylvania Statute creating an exemption from administration in favor of widows and orphans of real and personal estate to the value of three hundred dollars (Pepper & Lewis Digest Pa. Laws, title Decedents' Estates, § 210), where the property of a decedent, who was a widow at the time of her death, was appraised at less than three hundred dollars, her only surviving child had the right to have the property set off to her. Himes's Appeal, 94 Pa. St. 381, distinguishing King's Appeal, 84 Pa. St. 345.

2. Widow's Year's Support. — Under statute in some states, when the entire estate does not exceed a fixed amount, the court is authorized

Purpose of Statutes. — The purpose of these statutes is to protect the widow and orphans by securing them a certain amount to meet their expenses; to secure the immediate settlement of small and insolvent estates; and to prevent paying out of the estate useless expenses to persons in no way interested in the estate except to the extent that they may be able to get money out of it.¹

Dispensing with Administration. — It is usually provided that if the estate shall be found to come within the statute there shall be no administration, or if administration has been granted, upon the estate being found to be within the statute the administrator shall be discharged and the estate vested in the widow by an order of the court for that purpose, and there shall be no further proceedings in the administration unless further assets of the estate be discovered.²

II. PROPERTY TO WHICH STATUTES APPLICABLE — Real or Personal Property. — In Arkansas an early statute on this subject, providing that where the "estate" did not exceed three hundred dollars it should be vested absolutely in the widow or children, was held to refer to both real and personal property,³ but a later statute has by its express terms limited the right of the widow or children to have the whole of the "personal estate" of the decedent vested in them in case such personal estate does not exceed in value the sum of three hundred dollars.⁴

Separate Property of Married Woman. — In California it is held that the statute covers all property, whether community or separate, and hence where a married woman dies, leaving a separate estate which does not exceed the statutory amount, the whole may be set aside to the minor children, to the exclusion of the husband.⁵

III. RIGHTS AS BETWEEN WIDOW AND CHILDREN. — Under the Utah statute it has been held that where the family consisted of a widow and minor children, and the property was "set apart for the use of the family," the widow did not become the absolute owner of such property to the exclusion of the heirs and members of the family, but she was entitled only to the use of the property assigned to the family.⁶ Under the California statute it has been held that where the whole estate is set apart for the use and support of the widow and minor children, one-half only belongs to the widow, and the children are entitled to an undivided half.⁷

IV. ASSIGNMENT OF WIDOW'S AND CHILDREN'S RIGHTS — Claim and Order of Court. — Under the Alabama statute it has been held that where the estate is such that the widow or minor children are entitled to the whole, it is not indispensable for her or them to lay claim to it by having it set aside to her or them, but the law interferes and attaches her or their right to such property as absolutely as if the particular property had been selected, set apart, and to assign the whole thereof for the support of the widow and children. See the title ALLOWANCES, vol. 2, p. 162.

Homestead Statutes. — See the title HOMESTEAD, vol. 15, p. 693 et seq.; see also the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM EXECUTION), vol. 12, p. 94.

2. Dispensing with Administration. — See Matter of Atwood, 127 Cal. 427; Wood v. Johnson, 13 Ill. App. 548; Kahn v. Tinder, 77 Ind. 147.

3. Real or Personal Property. — Harrison v. Lamar, 33 Ark. 824.

4. Wilson v. Massie, 70 Ark. 25, quoting and construing Act of April 1, 1887, Sand. & Hill's Dig. Arkansas Stat. (1894), c. 1, § 3.

5. Separate Property of Married Woman. — Matter of Leslie, 118 Cal. 72. In this case the court said: "There is no more reason why a small separate estate of the deceased husband or wife should not be set apart to the minor children than there is why an estate of community property should not be set apart. The same object and purpose is subserved in both cases. The reasons for taking the estate out of administration, and setting it aside to the minor children, are the same whatever may be the technical character of the property belonging to the estate."

6. Rights of Widow and Children. — Rands v. Brain, 5 Utah 197, 272.

7. McGuire v. Lynch, 126 Cal. 576.

exempted.¹ In Arkansas it has been held that it is competent for the widow to show that the value of the estate does not exceed the statutory amount and avail herself of the benefit of the statute in a proceeding against her to account for the estate, although it does not appear that any decree has been rendered vesting the estate in her.² In other states the widow or children acquire no property rights until there has been an order of the court vesting the estate in her or them.³ In Indiana, if at any time the administrator discovers that the estate is worth less than the amount fixed by statute, he must report to the court, and the property less the expenses of administration must be delivered to the widow.⁴

Conclusiveness of Assignment. — Under the Indiana statute, when an order is made assigning all the property to the widow, this entitles her to sue for and recover all debts due to the decedent and to have possession of all property belonging to the estate, and until the order is set aside in a strict proceeding it is conclusive although the actual value of the estate may exceed the limit fixed by the statute, but before the order is made provision is made by statute that any creditor, heir, or legatee may appear and show property improperly valued or not included in the inventory.⁵

Discretion of Court. — Under the Vermont statute it is discretionary with the court whether or not it will assign to the widow and children the whole of the estate where it amounts to not more than three hundred dollars in value.⁶

Notice to Creditors of the Vesting of the Estate in the Widow or children has been held unnecessary in some jurisdictions.⁷

V. PRIORITY OF CERTAIN CLAIMS. — As a general rule the property vests in the widow or children free from the claims of creditors of the decedent.⁸ But specific liens against the property are protected,⁹ and provision is also sometimes made for the payment of the expenses of the decedent's last illness,¹⁰ his funeral expenses,¹¹ and the expenses of administration if any has been had.¹²

Personal Property Mortgaged by the Decedent can be recovered in an action of replevin from the widow notwithstanding it has been ordered and decreed to her by the court as a part of her husband's estate worth less than five hundred dollars. Recker v. Kilgore, 62 Ind. 10. See also Quakenbush v. Taylor, 86 Ind. 270.

An Execution Which Has Been Levied upon Real Estate of a husband during his lifetime is entitled to priority over the claim of the widow to whom the entire estate has been assigned as not exceeding in value five hundred dollars. Mead v. McFadden, 68 Ind. 340.

Judgments Against the Decedent are not specific liens, and hence are not protected, Quakenbush v. Taylor, 86 Ind. 270.

12. Expenses of Administration. — Matter of Thorn, 24 Utah 209. See also Downs v. Downs, 17 Ind. 95.

Expenses to Be Paid First. — Under the Utah statute the expenses of the last illness, funeral charges, and expenses of administration must first be paid before distribution to the widow. Consequently where the estate consisted almost entirely of real property less in value than fifteen hundred dollars such property could not be set apart to the widow, but it was proper to make an order of sale so that the expenses above referred to might be first paid. Matter of Thorn, 24 Utah 209.

SUMMARY SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES — SUMMONS.

VI. WIDOW'S RENUNCIATION OF WILL. — In Illinois it has been held that the widow's right to receive the whole of her deceased husband's estate, where it does not exceed the statutory amount, cannot be affected by her failure to renounce the benefit of the provisions of her husband's will.¹

SUMMARY WAY. — See note 2.

SUMMER. — The word "summer" strictly, perhaps, indicates only the months of June, July, and August, yet it is frequently used in a more general sense to indicate the warmest period of the year.²

SUMMING UP. — On the trial of an action by a jury the summing up is a recapitulation of the evidence adduced, in order to draw the attention of the jury to the salient points. The counsel for each party has the right of summing up his evidence, if he has adduced any, and the judge finally sums up the whole.³

SUMMON — SUMMONED. — See note 5.

SUMMONS. (See also the title SUMMONS AND PROCESS, 20 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1099.) — "A summons is 'the name of a writ commanding the sheriff or other authorized officer to notify a party to appear in court to answer a complaint made against him, and in said writ specified, on a day therein mentioned.'"⁴

1. Renunciation of Benefit of Will. — Ross v. Smith, 47 Ill. App. 197.

2. Summary Way. — In State Bank v. Anderson, 1 Mo. 244, it was held that a clause in a bank charter giving a remedy against the bank "in a summary way" on motion if the bank refused to pay its notes on demand did not dispense with the right to trial by jury, under the constitutional provision that the trial by jury shall remain inviolate.

An action on a solicitor's bill was stayed upon an agreement providing for evidence to be given to an accountant named, and in case of dispute, the matters disputed "to be referred in a summary way" to a designated person "under R. S. O. 174, for decision." It was held that by "a summary way" the parties meant that the reference was to be without ceremony or delay, the words "under R. S. O. 174" merely introducing the procedure under that act (the act respecting solicitors), and not to be construed as providing for an appeal. Sale v. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co., 32 Ont. 159.

3. Summer. — DeWitt v. Wheeler, etc., Sewing Mach. Co., 17 Neb. 533, citing Webst. Dict. And in this case, where, in a stipulation of facts, it was agreed that the debt accrued in the summer of a certain year, a homestead law having taken effect on the first day of June of that year, the court refused to presume that the debt accrued after the first of June.

So in Vanderhoef v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 328, a clause in an insurance policy consenting that the house might be left unoccupied "during the summer" was construed, in accordance with the apparent intent of the parties, to be equivalent to permission to leave the house unoccupied during the "farming season," and not to be limited to the summer months of June, July, and August.

4. Summing Up. — See ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., titles ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL, vol. 2, p. 698; INSTRUCTIONS, vol. 11, p. 47; OPEN AND CLOSE, vol. 15, p. 181.

Sum Up. — "To sum up means, ex vi termini, to present all the proof to the consideration of the jury." Johnson v. Kinsey, 7 Ga. 431.

5. Summon Jurors. — In State v. Queen, 62 S. Car. 247, it was held that the words "summon and impanel" in a constitutional prohibition of local or special laws "to summon and impanel grand or petit jurors," included the listing and drawing of jurors.

Summoned — Fees to Witnesses. — An Act of Congress of 1799 provided for certain fees to witnesses "summoned in any court of the United States." It was held that under this act the fees of witnesses who attended voluntarily were not taxable against the losing party. Driskell v. Parrish, 5 McLean (U. S.) 213, 241. See also Woodruff v. Barney, 1 Bond (U. S.) 528 (stated under LAW, vol. 18, p. 572), holding "pursuant to law" in an Act of Congress of 1853 equivalent to summoned in an Act of 1799.

6. Summons. — Johns v. Phoenix Nat. Bank, (Ariz. 1899) 56 Pac. Rep. 726. See also Hammond v. Tillotson, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 334.

Summons and Citation Distinguished. — See Johns v. Phoenix Nat. Bank, (Ariz. 1899) 56 Pac. Rep. 726, and see CITATION, vol. 6, p. 13.

Summons Clause. — In Kennedy v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 165 Pa. St. 183, it was said: "In form as well as in effect the summons clause of an attachment execution, required to be served on the garnishee, is in every proper sense of the term a 'writ.'"

Summons and Complaint. — The summons "is at common law the process to commence the suit, and is the first step taken to bring the party sued before the court; while the declaration or complaint is necessarily the second step, which manifests the cause of action and sets out a narrative of the case." Wilson v. Winchester, etc., R. Co., 82 Fed. Rep. 17.

Summons and Process. — See PROCESS vol. 22, p. 162, and see Franklyn v. Taylor Hydraulic Air Compressing Co., 68 N. J. L. 113, wherein it was said: "The word 'process' is very broad, and, as used in the act, it cannot be considered as only synonymous with the word summons. A summons is, of course, a process, but many kinds of process are not a summons."

1. Sunday Excepted. (See generally the titles GOVERNOR, vol. 14, p. 1103; STATUTES, vol. 26, pp. 550, 551.)—In People v. Whitman, 6 Cal. 659, it was held that the object of the words Sunday excepted, in the Constitution of California, limiting the time within which the governor might return a bill to the legislature without his approval to ten days, was to prevent the governor from being deprived of one of the ten days in case the last day should fall on Sunday. Another Sunday occurring between the delivering of a bill to the governor and its return by him, it was held, should be counted as one of the ten days.

It is a day observed by the Christian world as holy and set apart for the purposes of rest and worship, and is established in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ.¹

employment, and of religious observance. But Christians use the word "Sabbath" as synonymous with Sunday or the Lord's day.¹

b. IN LAW.—Sunday in law is a day set apart for the cessation of labor and business generally, in order that the physical and moral well-being of society may be promoted, as it is recognized that stated intervals of rest are necessary for that purpose. Sunday is a civil institution, and is regulated as such, notwithstanding it is the day of the week given up by Christian people to religious worship.²

Sunday — Sabbath — Lord's Day.—As used in the statutes no distinction has been made between the words "Sunday," "Sabbath," and "Lord's day." They are held to refer to the first day of the week.³

2. Holiday.—Holiday has been defined as a day on which the ordinary occupations are suspended.⁴

Pennsylvania.—Specht v. Com., 8 Pa. St. 312, 49 Am. Dec. 518; Sparhawk v. Union Pass. R. Co., 54 Pa. St. 439; Society, etc., v. Com., 52 Pa. St. 126, 91 Am. Dec. 139; Com. v. Wolf, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 48.

South Carolina.—Charleston v. Benjamin, 2 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 508, 49 Am. Dec. 608.

Tennessee.—Nashville v. Linck, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 499.

Texas.—Ex p. Sundstrom, 25 Tex. App. 133; Gabel v. Houston, 29 Tex. 335.

Utah.—State v. Sopher, 25 Utah 318, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845.

West Virginia.—State v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 15 W. Va. 362, 36 Am. Rep. 803.

Required by Public Economy.—According to the common judgment of civilized men, public economy requires, for sanitary reasons, a day of general rest from labor, and the day naturally selected is that regarded as sacred by the greatest number of citizens, as this causes the least inconvenience through interference with business. People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707.

Not a Religious Institution.—In State v. Powell, 58 Ohio St. 340, that court, construing the constitutionality of a Sunday statute, says: "If the observance of Sunday as a day of rest and abstinence from all secular pursuits had for its object the enforcement of a religious requirement, there are few lawyers or judges that would undertake to sustain the statute as a valid enactment."

In Ex p. Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 471, the court says: "In construing Sunday laws, courts have variously regarded them, some from a religious view, others from a secular, and still others from an anomalous commingling of both. In [California] they have never been upheld from a religious standpoint."

3. Sunday — Sabbath — Lord's Day.—Gunn v. State, 89 Ga. 341; Kilgour v. Miles, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268; State v. Drake, 64 N. Car. 589.

In State v. Drake, 64 N. Car. 589, the court, referring to the words "Sabbath" and "Sunday," says: "The words are not strictly synonymous; the one signifying Saturday, the seventh day of the week, the Jewish Sabbath; the other, the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's day. But by common usage the terms are used indiscriminately to denote the Christian Sabbath, to wit, Sunday."

"Sabbath Night" in a statute has been held to include as well the time between twelve o'clock on Saturday night and daylight on Sunday, as the time between after dark on Sunday and midnight on Sunday night. Kroer v. People, 78 Ill. 394.

4. Holiday Defined.—See HOLIDAYS, vol. 15, p. 512. And see generally infra, this title, XII. Statutes Concerning Holidays.

mention Sunday, without defining it, the ordinary day, beginning at twelve o'clock on Saturday night and ending at twelve o'clock on Sunday night, is meant.¹

Duration Defined by Statute.—In some states, however, the Sunday meant by the statutes has been expressly defined by them.²

III. SUNDAY AT COMMON LAW.—At common law judicial proceedings only were prohibited on Sunday.³ A person was not prohibited from doing his ordinary labor on Sunday,⁴ and the making of contracts was lawful;⁵ so also was the publication of notices not relating to judicial proceedings.⁶

IV. STATUTORY REGULATION IN ENGLAND AND THE UNITED STATES—In England.—The earliest statutes passed in England for the regulation of Sunday

1. Ordinary Day Meant.—Kilgour v. Miles, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268; State v. Green, 37 Mo. 466; Shaw v. Dodge, 5 N. H. 462; Pulling v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 384; Huidekoper v. Cotton, 3 Watts (Pa.) 56; Hiller v. English, 4 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 486. And see the title Day, vol. 8, p. 737.

2. Sunday Expressly Defined by Statute.—See the statutes of the different states.

From Rising to Setting of Sun.—For some purposes statutes have limited Sunday to the time between the rising and the setting of the sun. See Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 555; Finn v. Donahue, 35 Conn. 216; Fox v. Abel, 2 Conn. 541; State v. Green, 37 Mo. 466.

Midnight to Sunset.—In Maine and Massachusetts statutes formerly provided that Sunday should be held to extend from midnight between Saturday and Sunday to sunset on Sunday. Bryant v. Biddeford, 39 Me. 193; Hilton v. Houghton, 35 Me. 143; Nason v. Dinsmore, 34 Me. 391; Tracy v. Jenks, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 465; Merriam v. Stearns, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 257. And see Stewart v. Thayer, 168 Mass. 519, 60 Am. St. Rep. 407.

But the present statutes of those states provide that Sunday shall include the time between twelve o'clock on Saturday night and twelve o'clock on Sunday night, that is, the ordinary day. Maine Rev. Stat., c. 124, § 22; Mass. Rev. Laws (1902), c. 99, § 16.

3. Judicial Proceedings Only Prohibited.—Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 116, 86 Am. Dec. 292; Pepin v. Societe St. Jean Baptiste, (R. I. 1902) 54 Atl. Rep. 47.

Dies Non Juridicus.—Sunday was regarded dies non juridicus, a day upon which courts could not transact other than necessary or ministerial business. Reid v. State, 53 Ala. 402, 25 Am. Rep. 627; Tucker v. West, 29 Ark. 388; York v. Ackerman, 3 N. J. L. 460; Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365; Johnson v. Day, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 107; Allen v. Deming, 14 N. H. 133, 40 Am. Dec. 179; Pulling v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 385; Bbynton v. Page, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 429; Story v. Elliot, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 27, 18 Am. Dec. 423; Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 116, 86 Am. Dec. 292; Weidman v. Marsh, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 401, 2 Am. L. J. 408; Hellams v. Abercrombie, 15 S. Car. 110, 40 Am. Rep. 684. And see the title SUNDAYS AND HOLIDAYS, 20 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 1189.

4. Labor Not Prohibited.—Reid v. State, 53 Ala. 402, 25 Am. Rep. 627; Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365; Boynton v. Page, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 429; McCurdy v. Alaska, etc., Commercial Co., 102 Ill. App. 120.

Exercising Trade of Butcher on Sunday was not an offense at common law. Rex v. Brotherton, 1 Stra. 702.

5. Making of Contract Not Prohibited.—England.—Comyns v. Boyer, Cro. Eliz. 485; Drury v. Defontaine, 1 Taunt. 131; Mackaleys Case, Cro. Jac. 280, 9 Coke 66b; *Rex v. were directed against fairs,¹ amusements,² and travelers of certain kinds.³ These were followed by the important statute of 29 Car. II., c. 7, the main provisions of which were that no tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer, or other person whatsoever, should do or exercise any worldly labor, business, or work of their ordinary calling upon the Lord's day, or any part thereof; works of necessity or charity only excepted. This latter statute is still in force,⁴ and its terms have been many times judicially construed both in England⁵ and in the United States, where it has been adopted by state legislatures wholly or in part.

In the United States.—Sunday laws, or "laws for the better observance of the Lord's day" as they are generally called, were passed in most of the colonies,⁶ and they now exist in practically all of the states of the Union.⁷ The English statute of 29 Car. II., c. 7, has been the basis of the Sunday legislation in the United States. In many of the states it has been substantially adopted,⁸ while in other states Sunday statutes are more comprehensive than the English statute, although it has been followed in part.⁹

V. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SUNDAY LAWS—1. Generally Valid as Police Regulations.—Sunday laws are generally sustained as constitutional on the ground that, since Sunday is a civil and political institution, established for the purpose of promoting the moral and physical well-being of society,¹⁰ they are within the domain of the police power of the states.¹¹ In asserting their unconstitutionality it has been claimed that they were in violation of provisions safeguarding equal rights, personal or religious liberty, or that they took away liberty and property without due process of law, but where not so drawn as to

7. Sunday Laws Exist in Practically All the States.—Johnson v. Brown, 13 Kan. 529. And see the statutes of the different states.

8. English Statute Substantially Adopted in Many States.—In Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 301, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365, the court says that the statute of 29 Car. II. "has been substantially adopted by the legislatures of many of the states in the Union," but not by the legislature of Illinois.

9. Some State Statutes More Comprehensive.—Burns v. Moore, 76 Ala. 342, 52 Am. Rep. 332; O'Donnell v. Sweeney, 5 Ala. 467, 39 Am. Dec. 336; Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 301, 52 Am. Sunday Statutes Prohibiting Running of Interstate Trains have been attacked as unconstitutional on the ground that they affect interstate commerce, which is within the domain of Congress, but they are usually held constitutional as proper police regulations, notwithstanding the general power of Congress over interstate commerce. See the title INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 17, p. 97.

2. When Directed Against Particular Occupations — Prohibition of Labor and Business Generally. — The authorities are agreed that Sunday statutes prohibiting labor and business generally, except works of necessity or charity, are constitutional as being within the domain of the police power of the states.²

Statutes Prohibiting the Following of Particular Occupations on Sunday have been attacked as class legislation. By the weight of authority, however, they are held not to be unconstitutional on that ground,³ provided they operate upon every member of the particular occupation.⁴ And it makes no difference, as regards constitutionality of the statutes, whether the particular occupation is expressly prohibited,⁵ or whether it is impliedly prohibited under a general statute of prohibition excepting from its operation, however, certain named occupations, but not the particular occupation.⁶ But there is some authority

1. Sustained Almost Without Exception. — In People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707, the court said: "Sunday statutes have been sustained as constitutional almost without exception, the most notable instance to the contrary, Ex p. Newman, 9 Cal. 502, decided by a divided court in an early day in California, having been subsequently overruled by the courts of that state." See also Brayer v. State, 102 Tenn. 110.

Unsuccessfully Attacked as Being in Violation of Constitutional Provisions Safeguarding —

Equal rights: Ex p. Northrup, 41 Oregon 489.

Personal liberty: State v. Powell, 58 Ohio St. 324.

Religious liberty: Ex p. Burke, 59 Cal. 6, 43 Am. Rep. 231; State v. Judge, 39 La. Ann. 132; Judefind v. State, 78 Md. 510; State v. Powell, 58 Ohio St. 324.

3. General Statutes Constitutional by All Authorities. — Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365; State v. Sopher, 25 Utah 318, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845. And see Ex p. Westerfield, 55 Cal. 550, 36 Am. Rep. 47; Ex p. Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468. See supra, V. 1. Generally Valid as Police Regulations.

In Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365, the court says: "If the public welfare of the state demands that all business and all labor of every description, except works of necessity and charity, should cease on Sunday, the first day of the week, and that day should be kept as a day of rest, the legislature has the power to enact a law requiring all persons to refrain from their ordinary callings on that day. All will then be placed on a perfect equality, and no one can complain of an unjust discrimination."

Persons Observing Seventh Day as Sabbath. — Such statutes are constitutional, though they make no exception in favor of persons observing the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. Frolickestein v. Mobile, 40 Ala. 725; Scales v. State, 47 Ark. 476, 58 Am. Rep. 768; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 40; Com. v. Wolf, 3 S. &

R. (Pa.) 48; Specht v. Com., 8 Pa. St. 312, 49 Am. Dec. 518; Society, etc., v. Com., 52 Pa. St. 123, 91 Am. Dec. 139; Charleston v. Benjamin, 2 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 508, 49 Am. Dec. 608; Columbia v. Duke, 2 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 530; Parker v. State, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 476.

3. Not Class Legislation. — Theisen v. McDavid, 34 Fla. 440; People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589; People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707; People v. Hagan, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 349; State v. Powell, 58 Ohio St. 324; Ex p. Northrup, 41 Oregon 489; Breyer v. State, 102 Tenn. 103; Nashville v. Linck, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 499; State v. Nichols, 28 Wash. 628, overruling Tacoma v. Krech, 15 Wash. 296.

4. Must Apply to Whole Class. — In Ex p. Northrup, 41 Oregon 489, the court said: "If the act operates alike upon every individual of the class, its validity cannot be made to depend upon whether or not all persons are prohibited from doing any secular business or labor on Sunday."

A statute prohibiting any one engaged in the business of a barber from keeping open his bath-rooms on Sunday applies to part only of a class engaged in letting bath-rooms, and is unconstitutional as being class legislation. Ragio v. State, 86 Tenn. 272.

Excepting Members of Same Class in Different Localities. — The case of People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707, goes to the extreme of sustaining a law against Sunday barbering which contains an exception in favor of barbering in the city of New York and the village of Saratoga Springs until the hour of one o'clock Sunday afternoon.

5. Statutes Expressly Prohibiting Barbering Constitutional. — People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589; People v. Havnor, 149 N. Y. 195, 52 Am. St. Rep. 707; Ex p. Northrup, 41 Oregon 489.

In Tennessee, where all persons are prohibited from carrying on business on Sunday under a penalty, a statute has been held constitutional which prohibits barbering under a heavier penalty. Breyer v. State, 102 Tenn. 103.

Statutes Expressly Prohibiting Baseball Playing Constitutional. — State v. Powell, 58 Ohio St. 324; State v. Goode, 5 Ohio Dec. 281, 5 Ohio N. P. 179.

6. Particular Occupation Impliedly Prohibited. — In State v. Sopher, 25 Utah 318, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845, it was held that a statute prohibit-to the effect that statutes prohibiting the following of particular occupations, arbitrarily selected, where there is no general statute of prohibition affecting all classes, are unconstitutional.¹

Declaring What Are Not Occupations of Necessity and Charity. — A statute declaring that a certain occupation is not a work of necessity or charity, as a matter of law, is not unconstitutional as being class legislation; although the question whether or not other occupations are works of necessity and charity is one of fact.²

3. Exceptions of Persons Observing Seventh Day. — Sunday statutes excepting from their operation of prohibition whoever conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, are not unconstitutional as discriminating between religious sects.³

4. Act Embracing More than One Subject. — Sunday statutes must, of course, comply with constitutional provisions forbidding statutes to embrace more than one subject.⁴

VI. MUNICIPAL ORDINANCES — In General. — Ordinances passed for the regulation of Sunday by virtue of statutes granting to municipalities express or implied authority to regulate Sunday are sustained where they are within the scope of the delegated power.⁵

ing the keeping open of any place of business for the purpose of transacting business was constitutional, notwithstanding a subsequent statute excepted from its operation hotels, boarding houses, baths, taverns, livery stables, retail drugstores, and such manufacturing establishments as were usually kept in constant operation; and that a barber was subject to its provision.

In State v. Nichols, 28 Wash. 628, a person keeping open a store on Sunday for the purpose of selling goods, wares, and merchandise was held liable under a statute prohibiting the doing of business generally, but excepting from its operation hotels, drugstores, livery stables, and undertakers. The statute was attacked as class legislation.

1. Statutes Prohibiting Particular Occupations Unconstitutional. — In Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365, the court says: "When the legislature undertakes to single out one class of labor, harmless in itself, and condemns that and that alone, it transcends its legitimate powers."

Statutes Prohibiting Barbering on Sunday Unconstitutional. — Ex p. Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468; Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365; State v. Granneman, 132 Mo. 326; Tacoma v. Krech, 15 Wash. 296, overruled in State v. Nichols, 28 Wash. 628.

Where the Constitution Provides that the Legislature Shall Not Pass Local or Special Laws the violation of which is punishable as a misdemeanor, a statute making it a misdemeanor to engage in the business of baking for the purpose of sale for certain hours on Sunday is unconstitutional as being a special law. Ex p. Westerfield, 55 Cal. 550, 36 Am. Rep. 47.

2. Statute Constitutional Declaring Occupation Not One of Necessity or Charity. — State v. Petit, 74 Minn. 376, 177 U. S. 164. And see State v. Nichols, 28 Wash. 632.

In State v. Petit, 74 Minn. 376, a statute was held constitutional which provided that "keeping open a barber shop on Sunday for the purpose of cutting hair and shaving beards shall not be deemed a work of necessity or charity."

3. Statutes Exempting Persons Observing the Seventh Day as Sabbath Constitutional. — Johns v. State, 78 Ind. 332, 41 Am. Rep. 577; People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589. But see contra Shreveport v. Levy, 26 La. Ann. 671, 21 Am. Rep. 553, disapproved in People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589.

Excepting Members of Same Class Who Observe Another Day as Sabbath. — In People v. Bellet, 99 Mich. 151, 41 Am. St. Rep. 589, a statute was held constitutional which prohibited barbers from carrying on their business on Sunday, but excepted from its provision those barbers who observed another day as the Sabbath and actually refrained from labor on that day.

4. Statutes Must Not Embrace More than One Subject. — In Raggio v. State, 86 Tenn. 272, a statute was held unconstitutional which embraced two subjects, to wit, "barbering" and "bathing."

5. Sunday Ordinance Within Scope of Delegated Power Valid. — Penniston v. Newman, 117 Ga. 700; McPherson v. Chebanse, 114 Ill. 46, 55 Am. Rep. 857, 15 Ill. App. 313; Baxter's Petition, 12 R. I. 13; State v. Langston, 88 N. Car. 692; Canton v. Nist, 9 Ohio St. 439; Nashville v. Linck, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 499; Angerhoffer v. State, 15 Tex. App. 613; Flood v. State, 19 Tex. App. 584; Bohmy v. State, 21 Tex. App. 597; Ex p. Ginnochio, 30 Tex. App. 584. And see the titles INTOXICATING LIQUORS, vol. 17, pp. 282, 287; ORDINANCES, vol. 21, p. 943.

Securing Health and Removing Nuisances. — Power given to a municipality "to make regulations to secure the general health of the inhabitants, and to prevent and remove nuisances," does not authorize Sunday ordinances. Nashville v. Linck, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 499.

Securing Health, Peace, and Improvement of City. — Power to pass ordinances to secure the health, peace, and improvement of a city does not authorize an ordinance to prohibit the keeping open of stores and shops on Sunday. Cor-

Must Not Conflict with Statutes. — A Sunday ordinance must not conflict with a statute of the state on the same subject unless a clear intent is shown on the part of the legislature to delegate the power to make such an ordinance notwithstanding the state statute on the same subject.¹

VII. RULES OF CONSTRUCTION OF SUNDAY LAWS — 1. In General — Statutes Remedial. — Sunday statutes are usually considered remedial, and are construed liberally to the end that the purpose for which they are passed may be attained.²

Statutes Penal. — But there are a few authorities that have considered Sunday statutes penal and have given them a strict construction.³

2. Ejusdem Generis — In General. — The rule of construction, that where particular words of a statute are followed by general, the general words are restricted in their meaning to objects of a like kind with those specified,⁴ has been applied in construing Sunday statutes.

"Other Person Whatsoever," following the words "tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer," in the English statute of 29 Car. II., c. 7,⁵ means persons ejusdem generis with those before mentioned.⁶

vallis v. Carlile, 10 Oregon 139, 45 Am. Rep. 134.

Power to Regulate Certain Occupations implies power to pass ordinances prohibiting the doing of business on Sunday by persons pursuing those occupations. Nashville v. Linck, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 499.

Regulation of Convenience of Citizens. — The power to pass ordinances necessary for the convenience of the citizens of the municipality implies a power to pass ordinances prohibiting a particular class of persons from doing business on Sunday. Nashville v. Linck, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 499.

1. Ordinances Must Not Conflict with State Statutes. — State v. Welch, 36 Conn. 215; Loeb v. Attica, 82 Ind. 175, 42 Am. Rep. 494; State v. Langston, 88 N. Car. 692; Angerhoffer v. State, 15 Tex. App. 613; Flood v. State, 19 Tex. App. 584; Watson v. State, 21 Tex. App. 598.

Ordinance Prohibiting Sale of Liquor on Sunday held in conflict with general statute on same subject, there being no clear intent shown to delegate the municipality power to legislate on that subject. State v. Langston, 88 N. Car. 692. And see the title INTOXICATING LIQUORS, vol. 17, p. 282.

Ordinances Containing No Exceptions has been held to be in conflict with a statute making exceptions in favor of works of necessity or charity and persons observing some other day as the Sabbath. Canton v. Nist, 9 Ohio St. 439; Strauss v. Conneaut, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. 320.
